enormities of the government.

Spenser.

That this law will be always sufficient to bridle or restrain enormity, no man can warrant.

Hooker.

There are many little enormities in the world, which our preachers would be very glad to see removed; but at the same time dare not meddle with them, for fear of betraying the dignity of the pulpit.

Addison's Guardian.

3. Atrocious crime; flagitious villany;
crimes exceeding the common measure.

In this sense it has a plural.

It is not a bare speculation that kings may run into enormities; the practice may be proved by example.

Swift.

ENORMOUS. adj. [enormis, Latin.]

1. Irregular; out of rule; not regulated by any stated measure.

Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait.

Milton.

Nature here

Wanton'd, as in her prime; and plaid at will
Her virgin fancies, pouring forth more sweets,
Wild above rule, or art, enormous bliss!

Milton.

2. Excursive; beyond the limits of a regular figure.

The enormous part of the light in the circumference of every lucid point, ought to be less dis-cernible in shorter telescopes than in longer, because the shorter transmit less light to the eye.

Newton's Opticks.

3. Disordered; confused.

I shall find time

From this enormous state, and seek to give Losses their remedies.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. Wicked beyond the common measure.

sures: always used with some degree of dislike, or horror, or wonder.

A giant shepherd here his flock maintains.

Far from the rest, and solitary reigns,
A form enormous! far unlike the race
Of human birth, in stature, or in face.

Pope.

ENORMOUSLY. adv. [from enormous.]

Beyond measure.

One who could ever espouse a notion so enormously absurd and senseless, as that the world was framed by chance.

Woodward.

ENORMOUSNESS. n. f. [from enormous.]

Immeasurable excess.

When those who have no opportunity to examine our faith, see the enormousness of our works, but what should hinder them from measuring the master by the disciples?

Deacy of Ptery.

ENOUGH. adj. [genoh, Saxon; ganah,

Gothick; genog, Dutch. It is not easy to determine whether this word be an adjective or adverb; perhaps when it is joined with a substantive, it is an adjective, of which enough is the plural. In other situations it seems an adverb;
except that after the verb To have, or
To be, either expressed or understood, it may be accounted a substantive. It is pronounced as if it were written enuff.]
In a sufficient measure; so as may satisfy; so as may suffice.

Why would'st thou go, with one consent they cry,

When thou hast gold enough, and Emily?

Dryd.

When there was not room enough for their herds, they by content separated, and enlarged their pasture.

Locke.

ENOUGH. n. f.

1. Something sufficient in greatness or excellence.

'Tis enough for me to have endeavoured the union of my country, whilst I continued in public employments.

Temple.

The indolency and enjoyment we have, sufficing for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change, being content, and that is enough.

Locke.

Enough for me that to the list'ning swains,
First in those fields I sung the silvan strains.

Pope.

I will not quarrel with the present age: it has done enough for me, in making and keeping you two my friends.

Pope.

2. Something equal to a man's powers or faculties.

Some great defects and main errors in his nature, customs, and proceedings, he had enough to do to save and help, with a thousand little industries and watches.

Bacon.

ENOUGH. adv.

1. In a sufficient degree; in a degree that gives satisfaction.

2. It notes a slight augmentation of the positive degree: as, I am ready enough to quarrel; that is, I am rather quarrelsome than peaceable.

I am apt enough to think, that this same binarium of a stronger and a weaker, like unto masculine and feminine, doth hold in all living bodies.

Bacon.

It is sometimes pleasant enough to consider the different notions which different persons have of the same thing.

Addison.

They are now in prison at Florence; and, as it is said, treated hardly enough.

Addison on Italy.

song is well enough; that is, not quite well, though not much amiss.

4. An exclamation noting fulness or satiety.

Macbeth, beware Macduff!

Beware the thane of Fife! Dismiss me.—Enough.

Shakespeare.

Henceforth, I'll bear

Affliction 'till it do cry out itself,

Enough, enough, and die.

Shakespeare.

ENOUGH. The plural of enough. In a sufficient number.

The earth hath since born enough bleeding witnesses, that it was no want of true courage.

Sidney.

The walls of the church there are enough contented to build; the marbles are polished, the roofs shine with gold, the altar hath precious stones to adorn it, and of Christ's ministers no choice at all.

Hooker.

Man had selfish foes enough besides,

That, day and night, for his destruction wait.

Milton.

My conquering brother will have slaves enough,
To pay his cruel vows for victory.

Dryden.

There are at Rome enough modern works of architecture to employ any reasonable man.

I to do this! I, whom you once thought brave,

To sell my country, and my king enslave.

Dryden.

Long draughts of sleep his monstrous limbs enslave;

He reels, and falling fills the spacious cave.

Dryden's Aeneid.

He is certainly the most subjected, the most enslav'd, who is so in his understanding. Locke.

While the balance of power is equally held,
the ambition of private men gives neither danger nor fear, nor can possibly enslave their country.

Swift.

2. To make over to another as his slave or bondman.

No man can make another man to be his slave, unless he hath first enslav'd himself to life and death, to pleasure or pain, to hope or fear: command those passions, and you are freer than the Pathian king. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

The more virtuously any man lives, and the less he is enslav'd to any lust, the more ready he is to entertain the principles of religion.

Tillotson.

A man, not having the power of his own life, cannot by compact, or his own consent, enslave himself to any one, nor put himself under the absolute arbitrary power of another, to take away life when he pleases. Locke.

ENSLAVEMENT. n. f. [from enslave.] The state of servitude; slavery; abject subjection.

The children of Israel, according to their method of sinning, after mercies, and thereupon returning to a fresh enslavement to their enemies, had now passed seven years in cruel subjection.

do happily possess themselves. Carew.

ENVIER. n. f. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that desires the downfall of another.

Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments; for that enviers will give them that attribute, to the disadvantage of their virtues. Bacon's Essays.

They ween'd
To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.
Milton.

All preferments in church and state were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers discountenanced.
Clarendon.

ENVIOUS. adj. [from envy.]

1. Infected with envy; pained by the excellence or happiness of another.

A man of the most envious disposition that ever infected the air with his breath, whose eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor ears bear the burden of any man's praise. Sidney.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Shakespeare.

2. Sometimes with against.

Be not thou envious against evil men. Prov.

3. Sometimes with at.

Neither be thou envious at the wicked. Prov.

4. Commonly with of.

Sure you mistake the precept, or the tree;
Heav'n cannot envious of his blessings be.
Dryden.

ENVIOUSLY. adv. [from envious.] With envy; with malignity; with ill-will, excited by another's good.

Damned spirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviously to obstruct the ways that may lead us thither. Duppa.

How enviously the ladies look,
When they surprize me at my book!
And sure as they're alive at night,
As soon as gone, will shew their spite. Swift.

TO ENVIRON. v. a. [environner, French.]

1. To surround; to encompass; to encircle.

I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea. Shakespeare.

The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every side environed with huge mountains.
Kneller's History.

The manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple. Bacon.

Within the environing rocks flood the city.
Sandys.

Thought following thought, and step by step led on,
He enter'd now the bordering desert wild,
And with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditation thus pursu'd. Milton.

God hath scattered several degrees of pleasure and pain in all the things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almost all our thoughts. Locke.

2. To involve; to envelop.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you, 'till mischief and despair Drive you to break your necks. Shakespeare.

Since the must go, and I must mourn, come night,

Environ me with darkness whilst I write. Dante.

3. To surround in a hostile manner; to besiege; to hem in.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears. Shaksp.

In thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer. Shakespeare.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty,
When straight a barbarous noise environs me.
Milton.

4. To enclose; to invest.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of honour all environ. Cleveland.

ENVIRONS. n. f. [environs, Fr.] The neighbourhood, or neighbouring places round about the country.

TO ENUMERATE. v. a. [enumero, Lat.]
To reckon up singly; to count over diligently; to number.

You must not only acknowledge to God that you are a sinner, but must particularly enumerate the kinds of sin whereof you know yourself guilty. Wake's Preparation for Death.

Besides enumerating the gross defect of duty to the queen, I shew how all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERATION. n. f. [enumeratio, Lat.]
The act of numbering or counting over;
number told out.

Whoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties, must conclude, that well nigh the business of Christianity is laid on charity. Spratt.

The chemists make spirit, salt, sulphur, water, and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements.
Watts's Logic.

TO ENUNCIATE. v. a. [enuncio, Lat.]
To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to express.

ENUNCIATION. n. f. [enunciatio, Latin.]
1. Declaration; publick attestation; open proclamation.

Preaching is to strangers and infants in Christ, to produce faith; but this sacramental enunciation is the declaration and confession of it by men in Christ, declaring it to be done and owned, and accepted, and prevailing. Taylor.

2. Intelligence; information.

It remembers and retains such things as were never at all in the sense; as the conceptions, enunciations, and actions of the intellect and will.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Expression.

ENUNCIATIVE. adj. [from enunciate.]
Declarative; expressive.

This presumption only proceeds in respect of the dispositive words, and not in regard of the enunciative terms thereof. Ayliffe.

ENUNCIATIVELY. adv. [from enunciative.]
Declaratively.

ENVOY. n. f. [envoye, French.]

1. A publick minister sent from one power to another.

Now the Lycian lots conspire
With Phœbus; now Jove's envoy through the air Brings dismal tidings. Denham.

Perseus sent envoys to Carthage, to kindle their hatred against the Romans. Arbushnot on Coins.

2. A publick messenger, in dignity below an ambassador.

3. A messenger.

The watchful sentinels at ev'ry gate,
At ev'ry passage to the senses wait;
Still travel to and fro the nervous way,
And their impressions to the brain convey;
Where their report the vital envoys make,
And with new orders are commanded back.
Blackmore.

TO ENVY. v. a. [envier, French; invidere, Latin.]

1. To hate another for excellence, happiness, or success.

Envy thou not the oppressor, and chafe none of his ways. Proverbs.

A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty.
Collier of Envy.

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.

I have seen the fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour. Shakespeare.

You cannot envy your neighbour's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel; nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants; nor his greatness, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.

3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withhold maliciously.

Johnson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, seemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

TO ENVY. v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity;
with at.

In seeking tales and informations
Against this man, whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shakespeare.

He that loves God is not displeased at accidents which God chuses, nor envies at those gifts
he bestows. Taylor.

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked, and the success of persecutors? Taylor.

ENVY. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness.

Envy is a repining at the prosperity or good of another, or anger and displeasure at any good of another which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray on the Creation.

Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave. Pope.

2. It is used sometimes with of.

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shaksp.

3. Sometimes with to.

Many suffered death merely in envy to their virtuous and superiour genius. Swift.

4. Rivalry; competition.

You may see the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another. Dryden.

5. Malice; malignity.

Madam, this is a meer distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shaksp.

6. Publick odium; ill repute; invidiousness.

Edward Plantagenet should be shewed unto the people; to discharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon.

TO ENWHEEL. v. a. [from wheel.] To encompass; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakespeare.

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n
Before, behind thee, and on ev'ry hand
Enwheel thee round. Othello.

TO ENWOMB. v. a. [from womb.]

1. To make pregnant.

Me then he left enwomb'd of this child,
This luckless child, whom thus ye see with blood.
Spranger.

I'm your mother;
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwomb'd mine. Shakespeare.

2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.

Or as the Asick niger stream enwombs
Itself into the earth, and after comes,
Having first made a natural bridge to pass,
For many leagues, far greater than it was;
May 't not be said, that her grave shall restore
Her greater, purer, finer than before? Dante.

EO'LIPINE. n. f. [from Æolus and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe: which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, sends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior cull, and the waters lying round under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an calypse, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarifies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet.

EPACT. n. f. [ἐπᾶκτῶν.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year; and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 minutes 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days; but 30 being an intire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact; and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by three; for each one left add ten; Thirty reject: the prime makes epact then.

Harris.

As the cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532d year. Holder on Time.

EP'ULMENT. n. f. [French, from epaule, a shoulder.] In fortification, a sidewalk made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth. It sometimes denotes a semibastion and a square orillon, or mafs of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a cazemate. Harris.

EPENTHESIS. n. f. [ἐπένθεσις.] [In grammar.] The addition of a vowel or consonant in the middle of a word. Harris.

EPHA. n. f. [Hebrew.] A measure among the Jews, containing fifteen solid inches.

E'PHOD. n. f. [ἐφὼδ.] A sort of ornament worn by the Hebrew priests.

The ephod worn by the high priest was richly composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton; and upon the part which came over his two shoulders were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names. Where the ephod crossed the high priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the breastplate; in which twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. The ephods worn by the other priests were of plain linen.

- Calmet.

He made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

Exodus.

Array'd in ephods; nor so few As are those pearls of morning dew,

Sandys.

E'PIC. adj. [epicus, Latin; ἐπικός.] Narrative; comprising narrations, not acted, but rehearsed. It is usually supposed to be heroic, or to contain one great action achieved by a hero.

Holmes, whose name shall live in epic song, While music numbers, or while verse has feet.

Dryden.

The epic poem is more for the manners, and the tragedy for the passions.

Dryden.

From morality they formed that kind of poem and fable which we call epic.

Broom.

EPICE'DIUM. n. f. [ἐπιχεΐδιον.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from above shall hear each day One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay; These, your own anthems, shall become Your lasting epicedium.

Sandys's Paraphrase.

E'PICURE. n. f. [epicureus, Latin.] A follower of Epicurus; a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly false thanes,

And mingle with the English epicures.

Shaksp.

The epicure buckles to study, when shame, or the desire to recommend himself to his mistress, shall make him uneasy in the want of any sort of knowledge.

Locke.

EPICU'REAN. adj. Luxurious; contributing to luxury.

Flatman.

EPICYCLE. n. f. [ἐπίκυκλος.] A little circle whose centre is in the circumference of a greater; or a small orb, which, being in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion; and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet fastened to it round about its proper centre.

Harris.

In regard of the epicycle, or lesser orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal.

Brown.

Gird the sphere

With centric and eccentric, scribbled o'er;

Milton.

EPICYCLOID. n. f. [ἐπικυκλωΐδης.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle.

Harris.

EPIDE'MICAL. } adj. [ἐπιδεΐμικος.]

EPIDE'MICK. } adj. [ἐπιδεΐμικος.] 1. That falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemic disease, but to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons.

Bacon's Henry vii.

As the proportion of epidemic diseases shews the aptness of the air to sudden and vehement impressions, the chronical diseases shew the ordinary temper of the place.

Grout.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemic and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are those who shine as exceptions.

Swift.

He ought to have been busied in losing his money, or in other amusements equally laudable and epidemic among persons of honour.

Swift.

3. General; universal. Not used, nor proper.

They're citizens o' th' world, they're all in all; Scotland's a nation epidemic.

Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous foretelling to lie in names.

Camden.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately, without ambition.

Addison.

He has none of those little points and puerilities that are so often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatic turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those mist embellishments of Tasso.

Addison.

EPIGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from epigram.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jest upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epigrammatist for its father, and been afterwards gravely understood by some painful collector.

Pope.

Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial meets withal, one who, after he had walked through the fairest street twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden dish.

Peachment.

EPIGRAPHE. n. f. [from επιγραφή.] An inscription on a statue.

DiD.

EPILEPSY. n. f. [from επιληψία.] A convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any part with so great violence that the mind cannot restrain them.

Quincy.

My lord is fell into an epilepsy:

This is the second fit. Shakespeare's Othello.

Melancholy distempers are deduced from spirits drawn from that cachochymia; the phrenitis from choleric spirits, and the epilepsy from fumes.

Floyer on the Humours.

EPILEPTICK. adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; diseased with an epilepsy.

A plague upon your epileptick village!

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Shakespeare.

Epilepticks ought to breathe a pure air uninfected with any steams, even such as are very fragrant.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

EPILOGUE. n. f. [epilogus, Latin.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues.

Shakespeare.

Are you mad, you dog?

I am to rise and speak the epilogue.

Dryden.

EPINYCTIS. n. f. [from επινυκτις.] A sore at the corner of the eye.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease, No action leave to busy chronicles: Such whose supine felicity but makes In story chasms, in epochs mistakes. Dryden.

Their several epochs or beginnings, as from the creation of the world from the flood, from the first olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages. Holder on Time.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epochs marked out to us by the motions observable in it. Locke.

Time, by necessity compell'd, shall go Through scenes of war, and epochs of woe. Prior.

EPOCHÆ. n. f. [ἐποχῆ.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

EPOPE'Æ. n. f. [ἐπὶ ποίησις.] An epic or heroick poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epope, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it has not of its own. Dryden's Virgil.

EPULATIO. n. f. [epulatio, Latin.] Banquet; feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EPULO'TICK. n. f. [ἐπὶ πούλιον.] A cicatrizing medicament.

The ulcer, incarned with common sarcoticks, and the ulcerations about it, were cured by ointment of tuty, and such like epuloticks. Wise man of Inflammation.

EQUABILITY. n. f. [from equable.] Equality to itself; evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies, the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by Wisdom. Ray.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Asiatics lazy. Arbutnot on Air.

EQUABLE. adj. [equabilis, Latin.] Equal to itself; even; uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a seditious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as the elysian fields. Bentley.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift nor too slow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too slow an acid acrimony. Arbutnot.

EQUABLY. adj. [from equable.] Uniformly; in the same tenour; evenly; equally to itself.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common centre, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances. Chyene.

EQUAL. adj. [equalis, Latin.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparison; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them. Eccles.

Equal lot May join us; equal joy, as equal love. Milton.

Although there were no man to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles. Hale.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scots trusted not their own numbers, as equal to fight with the English. Clarendon.

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears, At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears; An equal temper in his mind he found, When fortune datter'd him, and when the frown'd. Dryden.

Think not of me: perhaps my equal mind May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me. Smith.

4. In just proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendation equal to your merit. Dryden's Fab. Dedica.

5. Impartial; neutral.

Each to his proper fortune stand or fall; Equal and unconcern'd I look on all: Rutilians, Trojans, are the same to me, And both shall draw the lots their fates decree. Dryden's Æneid.

6. Indifferent.

They who are not disposed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me. Chryse's Phil. Prin.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.

He submitted himself, and swore to all equal conditions. Mac.

8. Being upon the same terms.

They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged also, equal in spoils with themselves. Mac.

EQUAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. One not inferior or superiour to another.

He is enamoured on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth. Shakspeare's Much Ado.

He would make them all equals to the citizens of Rome. Mac.

Those who were once his equals, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superior; and those who were once his superiours, because they look upon him as their equal. Addison.

To my dear equal in my native land, My plighted vow I gave: I his received: Each swore with truth with pleasure each believ'd: The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd. Prior.

2. One of the same age.

I profited in the Jews religion above many of my equals in mine own nation. Gal.

To EQUAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or person equal to another.

2. To rise to the same state with another person.

I know no body so like to equal him, even at the age he wrote most of them, as yourself. Trambull to Pope.

3. To be equal to.

One whole all not equals Edward's moiety. Shakspeare.

4. To recompense fully; to answer in full proportion.

She sought Sicheus through the shady grove, Who answer'd all her cares, and equal'd all her love. Dryden.

Nor you, great queen, these offices repent, Which he will equal, and perhaps augment. Dryden's Virgil.

To EQUALISE. v. a. [from equal.]

1. To make even.

To equalise accounts we will allow three hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture. Bro.

2. To be equal to: a sense not used.

That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is. Digby.

Ye lofty beeches, tell this marchless dame, That if together ye fed all one flame, It could not equalise the hundredth part Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart. Waller.

EQUALITY. n. f. [from equal.]

1. Likeness with regard to any quantities compared.

Equality of two domestick powers, Breeds scrupulous faction. Shakspeare.

2. The same degree of dignity.

One shall rise, Of proud ambition; who, not content With fair equality, fraternal state, Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd, Over his brethren. Milton's Paradise Lost.

According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himself, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependance. Swift.

3. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equability.

Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their temper, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

E'QUALLY. adv. [from equal.]

1. In the same degree with another person or thing; alike.

To reconcile mens vices to their fears is the aim of all the various schemes and projects of sin, and is equally intended by atheism and immorality. Rogers.

The covetous are equally impatient of their condition, equally tempted with the wages of unrighteousness, as if they were indeed poor. Rogers.

2. Evenly; equably; uniformly.

If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship, sometimes slow, and at others swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does. Locke.

3. Impartially.

We shall use them, As we shall find their merits and our safety May equally determine. Shakspeare's King Lear.

E'QUALNESS. n. f. [from equal.] Equality.

Let me lament That our stars unconceivable should have divided Our equalness to this. Shakspeare.

EQU'ANGULAR. adj. [from æquus and angulus, Latin.] Consisting of equal angles.

EQUANIMITY. n. f. [equanimitas, Lat.] Evenness of mind, neither elated nor depressed.

EQU'ANIMOUS. adj. [equanimis, Latin.] Even; not dejected; not elated.

EQUA'TION. n. f. [æquare, Latin.] The investigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of excess and defect, to be applied to the whole.

We are to find out the extremities on both sides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the sun along the ecliptick; and to frame tables of equation of natural days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or subtraction, as the case shall require. Holder on Time.

By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, it seems that light is propagated in time, spending in its passage from the sun to us about seven minutes of time. Newton's Opticks.

EQUA'TION. [In algebra.] An expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms, but of equal value; as, $3x = 36.d$. Diä.

EQUATION. [In astronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the sun's apparent motion, and the time that is measured by its real or middle motion; according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjusted. DiD.

EQUATOR. n. f. [equator, Latin.] The equator on the earth or equinoctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east and sets due west, which he doth at no other time of the year. Harris.

By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles: neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator. Brown.

On the other side the equator, there is much land still remaining undiscovered. Ray on the Creation.

Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridgy rise,
Whence many a bustling stream auriferous plays. Thomson.

EQUATORIAL. adj. [from equator.] Pertaining to the equator; taken at the equator.

The planets have spheroidal figures, and obliquities of their equatorial to their ecliptic planes. Cheyne.

1. Having legs of an equal length.

2. Having the legs of an equal length, and longer than the base; isosceles.

An equicrural triangle goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth. Digby on the Soul.
We successively draw lines from angle to angle until seven equicrural triangles be described. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EQUIDISTANT. adj. [equus and distans, Latin.] Being at the same distance.

The fix stars are not all placed in the same concave superficies, and equidistant from us, as they seem to be. Ray.

EQUIDISTANTLY. adv. [from equidistant.] At the same distance.

The liver, seated on the right side, by the subclavian division equidistantly communicates unto either arm. Brown.

EQUIFORMITY. n. f. [equus and forma, Latin.] Uniform equality.

No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity of motion. Brown.

EQUILATERAL. adj. [equus and later, Latin.] Having all sides equal.

Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser. Bacon.

Triding utility appears in their twelve signs of the zodiack and their aspects: why no more aspects than diametrically opposite, and such as make equilateral figures? Bentley.

TO EQUILIBRATE. v. a. [from equilibrium.] To balance equally; to keep even with equal weight on each side.

If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadstone, have in this affriction been drawn from the equator of the loadstone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an equilibrated magnetick needle. Boyle's Experiments.

The bodies of fishes are equilibrated with the water in which they swim. Arbuthnot on Air.

EQUILIBRATION. n. f. [from equilibrate.] Equipoise; the act of keeping the balance even.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown.

In so great a variety of motions, as running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are observed. Derham.

EQUILIBRIUM. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Equipoise; equality of weight.

2. Equality of evidence, motives, or powers of any kind.

Things are not left to an equilibrium, to hover under an indifference whether they shall come to pass, or not come to pass. South.

It is in equilibrio

If deities descend or no;

Then let th' affirmative prevail,

As requisite to form my tale. Prior.

Health consists in the equilibrium between those two powers, when the fluids move so equally that they don't press upon the solids with a greater force than they can bear. Arbuthnot.

EQUINECESSARY. adj. [equus and necessarius, Lat.] Needful in the same degree.

For both to give blows and to carry,

In fights, are equinecessary. Hudibras.

EQUINOCTIAL. n. f. [equus and nox, Latin.] The line that encompasses the world at an equal distance from either pole, to which circle when the sun comes, he makes equal days and nights all over the globe: the same with equator.

EQUINOCTIAL. adj. [from equinox.]

1. Pertaining to the equinox.

Thrice th' equinoctial line

He circled; four times cross'd the ear of night

From pole to pole, traversing each colour. Milton.

Some say the sun

Was bid turn reins from th' equinoctial road,

Like distant breadth. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Happening about the time of the equinoxes.

3. Being near the equinoctial line; having the properties of things near the equator.

In vain they cover shades and Thracia's gales, Fining with equinoctial heat. Philips.

EQUINOCTIALLY. adv. [from equinoctial.]

In the direction of the equinoctial.

They may be refrigerated inclanately, or somewhat equinoctially; that is, towards the eastern and western points. Brown.

EQUINOX. n. f. [equus and nox, Lat.]

1. Equinoxes are the precise times in which the sun enters into the first point of Aries and Libra; for then, moving exactly under the equinoctial, he makes our days and nights equal. This he doth twice a year, about the 21st of March and 23d of September, which therefore are called the vernal and autumnal equinoxes. Harris.

It ariseth not heliacally about the autumnal equinox. Brown.

The time when this kid was taken out of the womb, was about the vernal equinox. Ray.

'Twas now the month in which the world began,
If March beheld the first created man;

And since the vernal equinox, the sun
In Aries twelve degrees or more had run. Dryd.

2. Equality; even measure. Improper.

Do but see his vice;

'Tis to his virtues a just equivox,

The one as long as th' other. Shakespeare.

3. Equinoctial wind; a poetical use.

The passage yet was good; the wind, 'tis true,
Was somewhat high, but that was nothing new,
No more than usual equinoxes blew. Dryden.

EQUINUMERANT. adj. [equus and numerus, Latin.] Having the same number; consisting of the same number.

This talent of gold, though not equinumerant, nor yet equiponderant, as to any other; yet was equivalent to some correspondent talent in brass. Arbuthnot on Coins.

TO EQUIP. v. a. [equipper, French.]

1. To furnish for a horseman or cavalier.

2. To furnish; to accoutre; to dress out.

The country are led astray in following the town; and equipped in a ridiculous habit, when they fancy themselves in the height of the mode. Addison's Spectator.

1. Furniture for a horseman.

2. Carriage of state; vehicle.

Winged spirits, and chariots wing'd,
From th' armory of God; where stand of old,
Myriads, between two brazen mountains lodg'd
Against a solemn day, harness'd at hand, Celestial equipage. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Attendance; retinue.

Soon as thy dreadful trumpet begins to sound,
The god of war, with his fierce equipage,
Thou dost awake, sleep never he to sound. Fairy Queen.

I will not lend thee a penny.—

I will retort the sum in equipage. Shakespeare.

Think what an equipage thou hast in air,

And view with scorn two pages and a chair. Pope.

4. Accoutrements; furniture.

EQUIPAGED. adj. [from equipage.] Accoutred; attended; having fine habits; having splendid retinue.

She forth issued with a goodly train

EQUI'VALENCE. } n. f. [equus and valeo, EQUI'VALENCY. } Latin.] Equality of power or worth.

Must the servant of God be assured that which he nightly prays for shall be granted? Yes, either formerly or by way of equivalence, either that or something better. Hammond.

That there is any equivalence or parity of worth betwixt the good we do to our brother, and the good we hope for from God, all good Protestants do deny. Smalridge.

Civil causes are equivalent unto criminal causes, but this equivalency only respects the careful and diligent admission of proofs. Alfissa's Parergon.

To EQUI'VALENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To equiponderate; to be equal to.

Whether the transgression of Eve seducing did not exceed Adam seduced, or whether the resistibility of his reason did not equivalence the facility of her seduction, we shall refer to schoolmen. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EQUI'VALENT. adj. [equus and valens, Latin.]

1. Equal in value.

Things

Well nigh equivalent, and neigb'ring value,
By lot are parted; but the value, high bear'a,
thy share,
In equal balance laid with earth and hell,
Flings up the adverse scale, and shuns proportion. Prior.

2. Equal in any excellence.

No fair to thine

Equivalent, or second! which compell'd
Me thus, though importune perhaps, to come
And gaze, and worship thee. Milton.

3. Equal in force or power.

The dread of Israel's foes, who, with a strength

Equivalent to angels, walk'd their streets,
None offering fight. Milton's Agonistes.

4. Of the same cogency or weight.

The consideration of public utility is, by very good advice, judged at the least the equivalent to the easier kind of necessity. Hooker.

5. Of the same import or meaning.

The use of the word minister is brought down to the literal signification of it, a servant; for now to serve and to minister, servile and ministerial, are terms equivalent. South.

EQUI'VALENT. n. f. A thing of the same weight, dignity, or value.

The slave without a ransom shall be sent;
It rests for you to make th' equivalent. Dryden.
Fancy a regular obedience to one law will be a full equivalent for their breach of another. Rogers.

EQUI'VOCAL. adj. [equivocus, Latin.]

1. Of doubtful signification; meaning different things; standing for different notions.

These sentences to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal.
Shakspere's Othello.

Words of different significations, taken in general, are of an equivocal sense; but being considered with all their particular circumstances, they have their sense restrained. Stillingfleet.

The greater number of those who held this were misguided by equivocal terms. Swift.

2. Uncertain; doubtful; happening different ways.

Equivocal generation is the production of plants without seed, or of insects or animals without parents, in the natural way of coition between male and female; which is now believed never to happen, but that all bodies are univocally produced. Harris.

There is no such thing as equivocal or spontaneous generation; but all animals are generated by animal parents of the same species with themselves. Ray.

Those half-learn'd widdings, num'rous in our isle

As half-form'd insects on the banks of Nile;
Unfinish'd things, one knows not what to call,
Their generation's so equivocal. Pope.

EQUI'VOCAL. n. f. Ambiguity; word of doubtful meaning.

Shall two or three wretched equivocals have the force to corrupt us? Dennis.

EQUI'VOCALLY. adv. [from equivocal.]

1. Ambiguously; in a doubtful or double sense.

Words abstracted from their proper sense and signification, lose the nature of words, and are only equivocally so called. South.

2. By uncertain or irregular birth; by equivocal generation; by generation out of the stated order.

No insect or animal did ever proceed equivocally from putrefaction, unless in miraculous cases; as in Egypt by the divine judgments. Bentley.

EQUI'VOCALNESS. n. f. [from equivocal.]

Ambiguity; double meaning.

Distinguish the equivocalness, or latitude of the word, and then point out that determinate part which is the ground of my demonstration. Norris.

To EQUI'VOCATE. v. n. [equivocatus, Latin.] To use words of double meaning; to use ambiguous expressions; to mean one thing and express another.

Not only Jesuits can equivocate. Dryden.
My soul disdain'd a promise;—
—But yet your false equivocating tongue,
Your looks, your eyes, your ev'ry motion promiss'd:
But you are ripe in frauds, and learn'd in falsehoods. Smollett.

EQUIVOCATION. n. f. [equivocatio, Lat.]

Ambiguity of speech; double meaning.

Reproof is easily misapplied, and, through equivocation, wrested. Hooker.

I pull in resolution and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend
That lies like truth. Shakspere's Macbeth.

EQUIVOCATOR. n. f. [from equivocate.]

One who uses ambiguous language; one who uses mental reservation.

Here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; yet could not equivocate to heaven. Shakspere.

the noosing a thousand. Shakspeare.

The lions brake all their bones in pieces or ere they came to the bottom of the den. Daniel.

Just trial, ere I merit
My exaltation without change or end. Milton.

The mountain trees in distant prospect please,
Ere yet the pine defended to the seas;
Ere sails were spread new oceans to explore.

The birds shall cease to tune their ev'ning song,
The winds to breathe, the waving woods to move,
And streams to murmur, ere I cease to love. Pope.

ERE. prep. Before.

Our fruitful Nile
Flow'd ere the wanted season. Dryden.

ERE'LONG. adv. [from ere and long.] Before a long time had elapsed. Nec longum tempus.

The anger already began to paint revenge in many colours, erelong he had not only gotten pity but pardon. Sidney.

The wild horse having enmity with the stag, came to a man to desire aid, who, mounted upon his back, and following the stag, erelong flew him.
Spenser on Ireland.

Nothing is lasting that is feigned: it will have another face than it had erelong. Ben Jonson.

They swim in joy,
*Ere*long to swim at large, and laugh, for which
The world erelong a world of tears must weep.
Milton.

I saw two stock-doves billing, and erelong
Will take the nest. Dryden's Virgil.

It pleases me to think, that I who know so small a portion of the works of the Creator, and with slow and painful steps creep up and down on the surface of this globe, shall erelong shoot away with the swiftness of imagination, and trace the springs of nature's operations. Spektor.

ERENO'W. adv. [from ere and now.]
Before this time.

Ah, gentle soldiers, some short time allow;
My father has repented him ereno. Dryden.
Had the world eternally been, science had been brought to perfection long ereno. Cheyne.

EREWH'LE. } adv. [from ere and EREWH'LES. } while.] Some time

There are many monuments erected to benefactors to the republic. Addison on Italy.

4. To establish anew; to settle.

Great difference there is between their proceedings, who erect a new commonwealth which is to have neither regiment nor religion the same that was, and theirs who only reform a decayed state. Hooker.

He suffers seventy-two distinct nations to be erected out of the first monarchy under distinct governors. Raleigh.

VOL. I.

5. To elevate; to exalt.

I, who am a party, am not to erect myself into a judge. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
I am far from pretending infallibility: that would be to erect myself into an apostle.

Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.
All the little scaramblers after fame fall upon him, and have recourse to their own invention, rather than suffer him to erect himself into an author with impunity. Addison.

6. To raise consequences from premises.

From fallacious foundations and misapprehend-ed mediums, men erect conclusions no way inferri-ble from the premises. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Men being too hasty to erect to themselves general notions and illgrounded theories, find themselves deceived in their stock of knowledge.
Locke.

Malebranche erects this proposition, of seeing all things in God, upon their ruin. Locke.

7. To animate; not to depress; to encourage.

Why should not hope
As much erect our thoughts, as fear deject them?
Denham.

To ERE'CT. v. n. To rise upright.

The trefoil against rain swelleth in the stalk, and so standeth more upright; for by wet, stalks
do erect, and leaves bow down. Bacon.

ERE'CT. adj. [erectus, Latin.]

1. Upright; not leaning; not prone.

Birds, far from proneness, are almost erect;
advancing the head and breast in progression,
only prone in volitation. Brown.
Basil tells us, that the serpent went erect like man. Brown.

2. Directed upward.

Vain were vows,
And plaints and suppliant hands, to Heav'n erect.
Phillips.

Let no vain fear thy gen'rous ardour tame;
But stand erect, and sound as loud as fame.
Glawville.

4. Vigorous; not depressed.

That vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, is wasted or dulled. Hooker.

ERE'CTION. v. s. [from erect.]

1. The act of raising, or state of being raised upward.

We are to consider only the erection of the hills above the ordinary land. Brewer.

2. The act of building or raising edifices.

The first thing which moveth them thus to cast up their poison, are certain solemnities usual at the first erection of churches. Hooker.
Pillars were set up above one thousand four hundred and twenty-six years before the flood, counting Seth to be an hundred years old at the erection of them. Raleigh's History.

3. Establishment; settlement.

It must needs have a peculiar influence upon the erection, continuance, and dissolution of every society. South.

4. Elevation; exaltation of sentiments.

Her peerless height my mind to high erection draws up. Sidney.

5. Act of rousing; excitement to attention.

Starting is an apprehension of the thing feared, and in that is a thinking, and likewise an inquisition what the matter should be; and in that it is a motion of erection: so that when a man would listen suddenly he started; for the starting is an erection of the spirits to attend. Bacon.

ERE'CTNESS. n. s. [from erect.] Uprightness of posture or form.

We take erectness strictly as Galen defined it:
they, only sayeth he, have an erect figure,
whose spine and thighbone are carried on right lines. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EREMITE. n. s. [eremita, Latin;
eremita.] One who lives in a wilderness;
one who lives in solitude; a hermit; a solitary: we now say hermit.

But oft fithes haunt that werke. Chaucer.

ERMELIN. n. s. [diminutive of ermine; armelin, French.] An ermine. See ERMINE.

Silver skins,
Passing the hate spot ermelins. Sidney.

ER'MINE. n. s. [hermine, French, from armenius, Latin.] An animal found in cold countries, which very nearly resembles a weasel in shape; having a white pile, and the tip of the tail black, and furnishing a valuable fur. The sellmonger and furriers put upon it little bits of Lombardy lambskin, which is noted for its shining black colour, the better to set off the whiteness of the ermine. Trevoux.

Ermine is the fur of a little beast, about the bigness of a weasel, called Mus Armenius; for they are found in Armenia. Peacham.

A lady's honour must be touch'd;
Which, nice as *ermine*s, will not bear a soil.
Dryden.

ERMINED. adj. [from ermine.] Clothed with ermine.

Arcadia's countess, here in ermin'd pride,

—I told him that your father was in Venice. Shakspeare.

A queen! have I not forbid her my house?
She comes of errands, does she? Shakspeare.

When he came, behold the captains of the host were sitting, and he said, I have an errand to thee, O captain. Kings.

From them I go
This uncouth errand sole. Milton.

His eyes,
That run through all the heav'n's, or down to th' earth.

Bear his swift errands, over moist and dry,
O'er sea and land. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Well thou do'd to hide from common fight
Thy close intrigues, too bad to bear the light;
Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame,
Tripping from sea, on such an errand came.
Dryden's Homer.

ERRANT. adj. [errans, Lat. errant, Fr.]

1. Wandering; roving; rambling. Particularly applied to an order of knights much celebrated in romances, who roved about the world in search of adventures.

It was thought that there are just seven planets, or errant stars, in the lower orbs of heaven; but it is now demonstrable unto sense, that there are many more. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Chief of domestic knights and errant,
Either for charter or for warrant. Hudibras.

ERRO'NEOUSLY. adv. [from erroneous.]

By mistake; not rightly.

The minds of men are erroneously persuaded, that it is the will of God to have those things done which they fancy. Hooker.

I could not discover the lenity of this sentence; but conceived it, perhaps, erroneously, rather to be rigorous than gentle. Galliver.

ERRO'NEOUSNESS. n. f. [from erroneous.]

Physical falsehood; inconformity to truth.

The phenomena may be explained by his hypothesis, whereof he demonstrates the truth, together with the erroneousness of ours. Boyle.

ERROUR. n. f. [error, Latin.]

1. Mistake; involuntary deviation from truth.

Error is a mistake of our judgement giving assent to that which is not true. Locke.

Oh, hateful error, melancholy's child!
Why do'st thou shew to the apt thoughts of men,
The things that are not? Shakspeare.

2. A blunder; an act or assertion in which a mistake is committed.

In religion,
What damned error, but some sober brow
Will bless it? Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

He look'd like nature's error, as the mind
And body were not of a piece design'd,
But made for two, and by mistake in one were join'd. Dryden.

3. Roving excursion; irregular course.

What brought you living to the Stygian state?
Driv'n by the winds and errors of the sea,
Or did you Heav'n's superiour doom obey. Dryden's Ætoid.

Thrice fam'd beyond all erudition.

Shaksp.

The earl was of good erudition, having been placed at study in Cambridge very young.

Watson.

To your experience in state affairs you have also joined no vulgar erudition, which all your modesty is not able to conceal; for to understand critically the delicacies of Horace, is a height to which few of our noblemen have arrived.

Dryden.

Some gentlemen, abounding in their university erudition, fill their sermons with philosophical terms.

Swift.

ERUGINOUS. adj. [eruginosus, Latin.]

and smoke, mixed with several unusual prodigies and figures, made their appearance.

Addison.

3. Sudden excursion of a hostile kind.

Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
Our first eruption, thither or elsewhere;
For this infernal pit shall never hold Celestial spirits in bondage.

Milton.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work;
Lest he, incens'd at such eruption bold,
Destruction with creation might have mix'd.

Milton.

4. Violent exclamation.

To his secretary, whom he laid in a palter near him for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would, in the absence of all other ears and eyes, break out into bitter and passionate eruptions.

Watson's Life of Buckingham.

It did not run out in voice or indecent eruptions, but filled the soul, as God the universe, silently and without noise.

South.

ESCRITOIR. n. f. [French.] A box with all the implements necessary for writing. Pronounced scrittoire.

ESCU'AGE. n. f. [from escu, French, a shield.]

Esfuage, that is, service of the shield, is either uncertain or certain. Esfuage uncertain is likewise twofold: first, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's wars so many days. The days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of the land so holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was so much land as, in those days, was accounted a sufficient living for a knight; and that was six hundred and eighty acres as some think, or eight hundred as others, or 15*l.* per annum. Sir Thomas Smith saith, that centus equestris is 40*l.* revenue in free lands. If the land extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord but twenty days. The other kind of this esfuage uncertain is called Castleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a castle. Esfuage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services.

ESCULENT. adj. [esculentus, Latin.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would fast five days; but the same man used to have continually a great whip of herbs that he smelled on, and some esculent herbs of strong scent, as garlick. Bacon.

ESCULENT. n. f. Something fit for food. This cutting off the leaves in plants, where the root is the esculent, as radish and parsnips, it will make the root the greater, and so it will do to the heads of onions; and where the fruit is the esculent, by strengthening the root, it will make the fruit also the greater.

ESCU'TEON. n. f. [A French word, from the Latin scutum, leather; and hence cometh our English word buckler, leine in the old Saxon signifying leather and buck or bock a buck or stag; of whose skins, quilted close together with horn or hard wood, the ancient Britons made their shields. Peacham.] The shield of the family; the picture of the ensigns armorial.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry, and some remembrance perhaps upon the escutcheon.

We will pass over the escutcheons of the tribes of Israel, as they are usually described in the maps of Canaan.

ESPA'LIER. n. f. Trees planted and cut so as to join.

Plant your fairest tulips in places of shelter, and under espaliers.

Behold Villario's ten years toil complete, His arbores darken, his espaliers meet.

ESPA'RCET. n. f. [medica, or trifolium, Latin.] A kind of sainfoin. Mortimer.

ESPECIAL. adj. [specialis, Latin.] Principal; chief.

They had th' especial engines been, to rear His fortunes up.

ESPECIALLY. adv. [from especial.] Principally; chiefly; particularly; in an uncommon degree above any other.

I somewhat marvel, that they especial should think it absurd to oppose church government, a plain matter of action, unto matter of faith, who know that themselves divide the gospel into doctrine and discipline.

Would you proceed especial against Caius Marcius?

This delight children take in doing of mischief, but more especial the pleasure they take to put any thing to pain that is capable of it, I cannot persuade myself to be any other than a foreign and introduced disposition.

Providence hath planted in all men a natural desire and curiosity of knowing things to come; and such things especial as concern our particular happiness, or the general fate of mankind.

ESPERANCE. n. f. [French.] Hope. Not used.

To be worst, The lowest, most dejected things of fortune, Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear. Yet there is a credence in my heart, An esperance so obstinately strong, That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears.

ESP'PAL. n. f. [French, from espier.] A spy; a scout; one sent to bring intelligence. Not used.

Translating the first of Homer's Iliads, I intended as an essay to the whole work.

Dryden

ESSENCE. n. f. [essentia, Latin.]

1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no: a rose in winter has an essence; in summer it has existence also.

Watts

One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;

Another, blood diffus'd about the heart;

Another faith, the elements conspire,

And to her essence each doth give a part.

Davies

I could wish the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence.

More's Divine Dialogues

He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties.

South

2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.

The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular christian man.

Hooker

3. Existence; the quality of being.

In such cogitations have I stood, with such a dargeness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence.

Stancy

4. Being; existent person.

As far as gods, and heavenly essences

Can perish.

Milton's Paradise Lost

5. Species of existent being.

Here be four of you, as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends; as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion, we may be the fifth essence.

Bacon

6. Constituent substance.

For spirits when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure;
Not ty'd or manac'd with joint or limb.

Milton

7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.

She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illum'd, cherish'd, kept alive.

Shakspeare

8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.

9. Perfume; odour; scent.

Our humble province is to tend the fair;
To have the powder from too rude a gale,
Not let th' imprison'd essences exhale.

Pope

To ESSENCE. v. a. [from essence.] To perfume; to scent.

The husband rails, from morning to night, at essenc'd tops and tawdry courtiers.

Adelphi

ESSEN'IAL. adj. [essentialis, Latin.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.

The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it.

Bacon

From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed.

Spratt

This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immaterial and divine power.

Bentley

A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion; but conceals an essential circumstance, upon which the whole weight of the matter turns.

Swift

And if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to th' amazing whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall.

Pope

2. Important in the highest degree; principal.

Judgment's more essential to a general
Than courage.

Denham's Sappho

3. Pure; highly rectified; subtly elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.

The juice of the seed is an essential oil or balm, designed by nature to preserve the seed from corruption.

Arbutnot

TO ETCH. v. a. [etzen, German.]

1. A way used in making of prints, by drawing with a proper needle upon a copper-plate, covered over with a ground of wax, &c. and well blacked with the smoke of a link, in order to take off the figure of the drawing or print; which having its backside tintured with white lead, will, by running over the stricken out lines with a stiff, impress the exact figure on the black or red ground; which figure is afterwards with needles drawn deeper quite through the ground, and all the shadows and hatchings put in; and then a wax border being made all round the plate, there is poured on a sufficient quantity of well tempered aqua fortis, which insinuating into the strokes made by the needles, usually eats, in about half an hour, into the figure of the print or drawing on the copper-plate. Harris.

2. To sketch; to draw; to delineate [unless this word be mistaken by Locke for etch.]

There are many empty terms to be found in some learned writers, to which they had recourse to etch out their systems. Locke.

3. [This word is evidently mistaken by Ray for edge.] To move forward toward one side.

When we lie long awake in the night, we are not able to rest one quarter of an hour without shifting of sides, or at least etching this way and that way, more or less. Ray.

ETCH. n. s. A country word of which I know not the meaning.

When they sow their etch crops, they sprinkle a pound or two of clover on an acre. Mortimer. Where you find dunging of land makes it rank, lay dung upon the etch, and sow it with barley. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ETERNAL. adj. [eternus, Latin.]

1. Without beginning or end.

The eternal God is thy refuge. Dante.

2. Without beginning.

It is a question quite different from our having an idea of eternity, to know whether there were any real being, whose duration has been eternal? Locke.

3. Without end; endless; immortal.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives.

—But in them nature's copy 's not eternal. Shaksp.

4. Perpetual; constant; unintermitting.

Burnt off rings morn and ev'ning shall be thine, And fires eternal in thy temple shine. Dryden.

5. Unchangeable.

Hobbes believed the eternal truths which he opposed. Dryden.

ETERNAL. n. s. [eternel, French.] One of the appellations of the Godhead.

That law whereby the Eternal himself doth work. Hooker.

The Eternal, to prevent such horrid fray; Hung out of heav'n his golden scales. Milton.

ETERNALIST. n. s. [eternus, Latin.]

One that holds the past existence of the world infinite.

I would ask the eternalist what mark is there that they could expect to desire of the novelty of a world, that is not found in this? Or what mark is there of eternity that is found in this? Burnes.

TO ETERNALIZE. v. a. [from eternal.]

To make eternal. Diä.

ETERNALLY. adv. [from eternal.]

1. Without beginning or end.

2. Unchangeably; invariably.

That which is morally good, or evil, at any time, or in any case, must be also eternally and unchangeably so, with relation to that time and to that case. South.

3. Perpetually; without intermission.

Bear me, some god, to Baja's gentle seats, Or cover me in Umbria's green retreats, Where western gales eternally reside, And all the seasons lavish all their pride. Addis.

ETERNAL. adj. [eternus, Latin.] Eternal; perpetual; endless.

ETERNITY. n. s. [eternitas, Latin.]

1. Duration without beginning or end.

In this ground his precious root Still lives, which, when weak time shall be pow'd out Into eternity, and circular joys Dancing an endless round, again shall rise. Crawford.

Thy immortal rhyme

Makes up this one short point of time, To fill up half the orb of round eternity. Cowley.

By repeating the idea of any length of duration which we have in our minds, with all the endless addition of number, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.

2. Duration without end.

Beyond is all abyss,

Eternity, whole end no eye can reach! Milton.

Eternity, thou pleasing, dreadful thought! Through what variety of untied being, Through what new scenes and changes must we pass! Addison.

TO ETERNIZE. v. a. [eterno, Latin.]

1. To make endless; to perpetuate.

I with two fair gifts

Created him endow'd; with happiness, And immortality: that fondly lost, This other lov'd but to eternize woe. Milton.

2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.

Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings. Sidney.

And well befits all knights of noble name, That covet in th' immortal book of fame

To be eternized, that fame to haunt. Fairy Q.

I might relate of thousands, and their names Eternize here on earth; but those elect Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n, Seek not the praise of men. Milton.

The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eternized their fame, and thereby their own.

Both of them are set on fire by the great actions of heroes, and both endeavour to eternize them.

Dryden's Duressney.

3. Creech seems to have accented the first syllable.

Hence came its name, in that the grateful Jove Hath eterniz'd the glory of his love.

- ETHER. n. f. [ether, Latin; αιθερ.] 1. An element more fine and subtle than air; air refined or sublimed.

If any one should suppose that ether, like our air, may contain particles which endeavour to recede from one another; for I do not know what this ether is; and that its particles are exceedingly smaller than those of air, or even than those of light, the exceeding fineness of its particles may contribute to the greatness of the force by which those particles may recede from one another.

Newton.

The parts of other bodies are held together by the eternal pressure of the ether, and can have no other conceivable cause of their cohesion and union.

Locke.

2. The matter of the highest regions above. There fields of light and liquid ether flow, Purg'd from the pond'rous drags of earth below.

Dryden.

ETHEREAL. adj. [from ether.]

1. Formed of ether. Man feels me, when I press th' etherial plains.

Dryden.

2. Celestial; heavenly.

Go, heav'nly guest, etherial messenger, Sent from whole sov'reign goodness I adore. Milt. Thrones and imperial pow'rs, offspring of Heav'n, Ethereal virtues. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Such as these, being in good part freed from the entanglements of sense and body, are employed, like the spirits above, in contemplating the Divine Wisdom in the works of nature; a kind of anticipation of the etherial happiness and employment.

Glanville.

Vast chain of being, which from God began, Natures etherial, human; angel, man.

Pope.

- ETHICKS. n. f. without the singular. [ηθικά.] The doctrine of morality; a system of morality.

For of all moral virtues, he was all That ethicks speak of virtues cardinal.

Donne.

I will never set politics against ethicks; for true ethicks are but as a handmaid to divinity and religion.

Bacon.

Perius professes the stoick philosophy; the most generous amongst all the sects who have given rules of ethicks.

Dryden.

If the atheists would live up to the ethicks of Epicurus himself, they would make few or no profelytes from the christian religion.

Rentley.

- ETHNICK. adj. [εθνικός.] Heathen; pagan; not Jewish; not christian.

Such contumely as the ethnick world durst not offer him, is the peculiar insolence of degenerated christians.

Government of the Tongue.

I shall begin with the agreement of profane, whether Jewish or ethnick, with the sacred writings.

Greiv.

- ETHNICKS. n. f. Heathens; not Jews; not christians.

This first Jupiter of the ethnicks was then the same Cain, the son of Adam.

Raleigh.

- ETHOLOGICAL. adj. [εθολογικός and λογος.] Treating of morality.

- ETIOLOGY. n. f. [αιτιολογία.] An account of the causes of any thing, generally of a distemper.

I have not particulars enough to enable me to enter into the etiology of this distemper.

Arbut.

- ETYMOLOGICAL. adj. [from etymology.] Relating to etymology; relating to the derivation of words.

Excuse this conceit, this etymological observation.

Locke.

- ETYMOLOGIST. n. f. [from etymology.] One who searches out the original of words; one who shows the derivation of words from their original.

- ETYMOLOGY. n. f. [ετυμολογία, Latin; ετυμος; and λογος.]

1. The descent or derivation of a word from its original; the deduction of formations from the radical word; the analysis of compound words into primitives.

Consumption is generally taken for any universal diminution and colligation of the body, which acceptance its etymology implies.

Harvey.

When words are restrained, by common usage, to a particular sense, to run up to etymology, and construe them by dictionary, is wretchedly ridiculous.

Collier's View of the Stage.

Pelvis is used by comic writers for a looking-glass, by which means the etymology of the word is visible, and pelvidera will signify a lady who looks in her glass.

Adelphi's Spectator.

If the meaning of a word could be learned by its derivation or etymology, yet the original derivation of words is oftentimes very dark.

Hatti.

2. The part of grammar which delivers the inflections of nouns and verbs.

- ETYMON. n. f. [ετυμος.] Origin; primitive word.

Blue hath its etymon from the High Dutch blaw; from whence they call himmel-blue, that which we call sky-colour or heaven's blue.

Peacham.

- TO EVA'CATE. v. a. [evaco, Latin.] To empty out; to throw out.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disincarnate venene bodies, or to evacuate them.

Harvey on the Placur.

- TO EVACUATE. v. a. [evacuatio, Lat.]

1. To make empty; to clear.

There is no good way of prevention but by evacuating clean, and emptying the church.

Hooker.

We tried how far the air would manifest its gravity in so thin a medium, as we could make in our receiver, by evacuating it.

Boyle.

2. To throw out as noxious, or offensive. 3. To void by any of the excretory passages.

Boerhaave gives an instance of a patient, who by a long use of whey and water, and garden fruits, evacuated a great quantity of black matter, and recovered his senses.

Arbutnot.

4. To make void; to evacuate; to nullify; to annul.

The defect, though it would not evacuate a marriage, after cohabitation and actual consummation; yet it was enough to make void a contract.

Bacon's Henry vii.

If the prophecies recorded of the Messiah are not fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth, it is impossible to know when a prophecy is fulfilled, and when not, in any thing or person whatsoever, which would utterly evacuate the use of them.

South.

5. To quit; to withdraw from out of a place.

As this neutrality was never observed by the emperor, so he never effectually evacuated Catalonia.

Swift.

- EVA'CUANT. n. f. [evacuans, Latin.] Medicine that procures evacuation by any passage.

- EVACUATION. n. f. [from evacuate.]

- TO EVA'DE. v. a. [evado, Latin.]

1. To elude; to escape by artifice or stratagem.

In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannick power: if he evade us there, Inforce him with his envy to the people.

Shakspeare.

If thou covest death, as utmost end

O misery, so thinking to evade

The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God

Hath whiter arm'd his vengeful ire, than to

To be forestall'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

He might evade the accomplishment of these afflictions he now gradually endureth.

Brown.

2. To avoid; to decline by subterfuge.

Our question thou evadest; how didst thou dare

To break hell bounds?

Dryden.

3. To escape or elude by sophistry.

My argument evidently overthrows all that he brings to evade the testimonies of the fathers.

Stillingfleet.

4. To escape as imperceptible or unconquerable, as too great or too subtle to be seized or subdued.

They are but the fruits of adust choler, and the evaporations of a vindictive spirit. Howel.

Evaporations are at some times greater, according to the greater heat of the sun; so wherever they alight again in rain, 'tis superior in quantity to the rain of colder seasons. Woodward.

2. The act of attenuating matter, so as to make it fume away.

Those waters, by rarefaction and evaporation, ascended. Raleigh.

3. [In pharmacy.] An operation by which liquids are spent or driven away in steams, so as to leave some part stronger, or of a higher consistence than before. Quincy.

EVA'SION. n. f. [evasum, Latin.] Excuse; subterfuge; sophistry; artifice; artful means of eluding or escaping.

We are so well acquainted with those answers; But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions. Shakespeare.

Him, after all disputes,
Forc'd I absolve: all my evasions vain,
And reasonings, though through mazes, lead me Still

But to my own conviction. Milton.
In vain thou strive'st to cover shame with shame;
Thou by evasions thy crime uncover'st more. Milton.

EVA'SIVE. adj. [from evade.]

1. Practising evasion; elusive.

Thus he, though conscious of th' ethereal guest,
Answer'd evasive of the sky request. Pope.

2. Containing an evasion; sophistical; dishonestly artful.

EVA'SIVELY. adv. [from evasive.] By evasion; elusively; sophistically.

EUCCHARIST. n. f. [ευχαριστία.] The act of giving thanks; the sacramental act in which the death of our Redeemer is commemorated with a thankful remembrance; the sacrament of the Lord's supper.

Himself did better like of common bread to be used in the eucharist. Hooker.

Some receive the sacrament as a means to procure great graces and blessings, others as an eucharist and an office of thanksgiving for what they have received. Taylor.

EUCCHARISTICAL. adj. [from eucharistia.]

1. Containing acts of thanksgiving.

The latter part was eucharistical, which began at the breaking and blessing of the bread. Brown.

1. The close of the day; the latter part of the day; the interval between bright light and darkness.

They, like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from morn 'till even fought,
And sheath'd their swords for lack of argument. Shakespeare.

When the sun's orb both even and morn is bright,
Then let no fear of storms thy mind affright. May's Virgil.

Such fights as youthful poets dream
On summer eves by haunted stream. Milton.
O, nightingale, that on yon bloomy stray
Warblest at eve, when all the woods are still. Milton.

Th' unerring sun by certain signs declares,
What the late even, or early morn prepares. Dryden's Virgil.

Winter, oft at eve, resumes the lance,
Chills the pale morn. Thomson's Spring.

2. The vigil or fast to be observed before a holyday. In this sense only eve is used, not even.

Let the immediate preceding day be kept as the eve to this great feast. Duppa.

E'VEN. adj. [æfen, Saxon; even, Dutch; aquus, Latin.]

1. Level; not rugged; not unequal; smooth as opposed to rough.

To see a beggar's brat in riches flow,
Adds not a wrinkle to my even brow. Dryden.

The present face of Rome is much more even and level than it was formerly. Addison on Italy.

The superficies of such plates are not even, but have many cavities and swellings, which, now shallow so ever, do a little vary the thickness of the plate. Newton's Opticks.

2. Uniform; equal to itself.

Lay the rough paths of peevish nature even,
And open in each heart, a little heav'n. Prior.

3. Level with; parallel to.

That the net may be even to the midst of the altar. Exodus.

And shall lay thee even with the ground. Luke.

4. Not having inclination any way; nor leaning to any side.

He was
A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honours even. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

5. Not having any part higher or lower than the other.

When Alexander demanded of one what was the fittest seat of his empire, he laid a dry hide before him, and desired him to set his foot on one side thereof; which being done, all the other parts of the hide did rise up; but when he did set his foot in the middle, all the other parts lay flat and even. Davies.

6. Equal on both sides; fair; not favouring either.

Upheld by me, yet once more he shall stand
On even ground against his mortal foe. Milton

7. Without any thing owed, either good or ill; out of debt.
We reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you;
Henceforth be eais. Shakspeare's Macbeth
I will be even with thee, doubt it not. Shakspeare
I do confess

The blind lad's pow'r, while he inhabits there;
But I'll be ev'n with him nevertheless. Suckling
In taking revenge, a man is but even with his enemy; but in passing it over, he is superior.

Bacon's Essays

Even reckoning makes lasting friends: and the way to make reckonings even is to make them often. South

The publick is always even with an author who has not a just deference for them: the contempt is reciprocal. Addison

The true reason of this strange doctrine was to be even with the magistrate, who was against them; and they resolved at any rate to be against him. Atterbury

8. Calm; not subject to elevation or depression; not uncertain.
Desires compos'd, affections ever ev'n,
Tears that delight, and sighs that waite to heav'n.
Pope

9. Capable to be divided into equal parts;
not odd.

Let him tell me whether the number of the stars be even or odd. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy What verity there is in that numeral conceit in the lateral division of man by even and odd, as-cribing the odd unto the right side, and even unto the left. Brown's Vulgar Errors

To EVEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make even.
2. To make out of debt; to put in a state in which either good or ill is fully repaid.
Nothing can, or shall content my soul,
'Till I am evened with him wife for wife. Shakspeare

3. To level; to make level.
This temple Xerxes evened with the soil, which Alexander is said to have repaired. Raleigh
Beat, roll, and mow carpet-walks and cammo-nile; for now the ground is supple, and it will even all inequalities. Evelyn

To EVEN. v. a. To be equal to. Now disused.

A like strange observation taketh place here as at Stonehenge, that a redoubled numbering never eveneth with the first. Carew

EVEN. adv. [often contracted to ev'n.]

1. A word of strong assertion; verily.
Even so did those Gauls puff the coasts.
Spenser's Ireland

Thou wast a soldier
Even to Cato's wish; not fierce and terrible
Only in strokes. Shakspeare's Macbeth

Dang'rous rocks,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream,
And, in a word, yea even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shakspeare

It is not much that the good man ventures;
after this life, if there be no God, he is as well as the bad; but if there be a God, is infinitely better, even as much as unspeakable and eternal happiness is better than extreme and endless misery.

Tillotson

He might even as well have employed his time, as some princes have done, in catching moles.
Atterbury

2. Notwithstanding; though it was so that.
All I can say for those passages is, that I knew they were bad enough to please even when I wrote them. Dryden

3. Likewise; not only so, but also.
The motions of all the lights of heaven might afford measures of time, if we could number them; but most of those motions are not evident, and the great lights are sufficient, and serve also to measure even the motions of those others. Holder Here all their rage, and ev'n their murmurs cease,

And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace.
Pope

4. So much as.

Books give the same turn to our thoughts that company does to our conversation, without loading our memories, or making us even sensible of the change. Swift

5. A word of exaggeration in which a secret comparison is implied; as, even the great, that is, the great like the mean.
Nor death itself can wholly wash your stains,
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains.
Dryden

I have made several discoveries which appear new, even to those who are versed in critical learning. Addison's Spectator

6. A term of concession.

Since you refined the notion, and corrected the malignity, I shall ev'n let it pass. Collier

EVENH'ANDED. adj. [even and band.]
Impartial; equitable.

Evenhanded justice
Returns th' ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips. Shakspeare's Macbeth

EVENING. n. s. [xpen, Saxon; avend, Dutch.] The close of the day; the beginning of night.

I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more. Shakspeare

The devil is now more laborious than ever, the long day of mankind drawing towards an evening, and the world's tragedy and time near at an end.
Raleigh's History

Mean time the sun descended from the skies,
And the bright evening star began to rise.
Dryden's Æneid

It was the sacred rule among the Pythagoreans, that they should every evening thrice run over the actions and affairs of the day. Watts

EVENLY. adv. [from even.]

1. Equally; uniformly; in an equipoise.
In an infinite chaos nothing could be formed;
no particles could convey by mutual attraction;
for every one there must have infinite matter around it, and therefore must rest for ever, being evenly balanced between infinite attractions.
Bentley

disobliged you; and hath made your flame a better return, by restoring you your own heart.

Byrle's Scraphick Love

E'VEA. adv. [xppe, Saxon.]

1. At any time.

Men know by this time, if ever they will know, whether it be good or evil which hath been so long retained. Hosker

If thou hast that, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever, I mean valour, this might shew it. Shakspeare

You serve a master who is as free from the envy of friends, as even any king was. Bacon

So few translations deserve praise, that I scarce ever saw any which deserved pardon. Denham

The most sensual man that ever was in the world never felt so delicious a pleasure as a clear conscience. Tillotson

By repeating any idea of any length of time, as of a minute, a year, or an age, as often as we will in our own thoughts, and adding them to one another, without ever coming to the end of such addition, we come by the idea of eternity.

Locke

2. At all times; always; without end.

God hath had ever, and ever shall have, some church visible upon the earth. Hooker.

I see things may serve long, but not serve ever. Shakespeare.

He shall ever love, and always be
The subject of my scorn and cruelty. Dryden.
Mankind is ever the same, and nothing lost out of nature, though every thing is altered.

Dryden's Fables, Pref.
Ever since that time Lisander has been at the house. Tatler.

Immortal Vida! on whose honour'd brow
The poet's bays and critic's ivy grow,
Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame. Pope.

3. For ever. Eternally; to perpetuity.

Men are like a company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other kinds of viands; which, having enjoyed for a season, they cease to be, and exist no more for ever. Locke.

We'll to the temple: there you'll find your son;
And there be crown'd, or give him up for ever. A. Phillips.

4. It is sometimes reduplicated.

For ever and for ever, farewell Caius. Shaks.
I know a lord, who values no lease, though for a thousand years, nor any estate that is not for ever and ever. Temple.

The meeting points the fatal lock dissolve
From the fair head for ever and for ever. Pope.

5. At one time, as ever and anon: that is, at one time and another; now and then.

So long as Guyon with her communed,
Unto the ground the cast her modest eye;
And ever and anon, with rosy red,
The bashful blood her snowy cheeks did dye. Fairy Queen.

The fat ones would be ever and anon making sport with the lean, and calling them strawlings. L'Estrange.

He lay stretch'd along,
And ever and anon a silent tear
Stole down and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryden.

6. In any degree.

Let no man fear that harmful creature ever the less, because he sees the apostle safe from that poison. Hall.

For a mine undiscovered, neither the owner of the ground or any body else are ever the richer. Collier on Pride.

It suffices to the unity of any idea, that it be considered as one representation or picture, though made up of ever to many particulars. Locke.

There must be somewhere such a rank as man:
And all the question, wrangle ever so long,
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong? Pope's Essays.

7. A word of enforcement, or aggravation.

As soon as ever he had done it; that is, immediately after he had done it. In this sense it is scarcely used but in familiar language.

That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

They brake all their bones in pieces, or ever they came at the bottom of the den. Daniel.
That purse in your hand, has a twin-brother, is as like him as ever he can look. Dryden.

As soon as ever the bird is dead,

Opening again, he lays his claim
To half the profit, half the fame. Prior.

The title of duke had been sunk in the family ever since the attainder of the great duke of Suffolk. Addison on Italy.

8. EVER a. [as every, that is, even each or ever each is each one, all.] Any. This word is still retained in the Scottish dialect.

I am old, I am old.
—I love thee better than I love ever a scurvy young boy of them all. Shakespeare.

9. It is often contracted into er.

10. It is much used in composition in the sense of always: as, evergreen, green throughout the year; everdaring, enduring without end. It is added almost arbitrarily to neutral participles and adjectives, and will be sufficiently explained by the following instances:

EVERBUBBLING. adj. [ever and bubbling.]
Boiling up with perpetual murmurs.

Panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That everbubbling spring. Grasshop.

EVERBURNING. adj. [ever and burning.] Unextinguished.

His tail was stretched out in wondrous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it rageth;
And with extorted power and busrow'd strength,
The everburning lamps from thence it brought. Sprenger.

Torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With everburning sulphur unconsum'd. Milton.

EVERDURING. adj. [ever and during.]
Eternal; enduring without end.

Our souls, piercing through the impurity of flesh, behold the highest heavens, and thence bring knowledge to contemplate the everdaring glory and termless joy. Raleigh.

Heav'n open'd wide
Her everdaring gates, harmonious sound!
On golden hinges moving. Milton.

EVERGREEN. adj. [ever and green.] Verdant throughout the year.

There will I build him
A monument, and plant it round with shade
Of laurel, evergreen, and branching palm. Milton.

The juice, when in greater plenty than can be exhaled by the sun, renders the plant evergreen. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EVERGREEN. n. s. A plant that retains its verdure through all the seasons.

I'll hate him everlastingly,
That bids me be of comfort any more. Shaks.
Many have made themselves everlastingly ridiculous. Swift.

EVERLASTINGNESS. n. s. [from everlasting.] Eternity; perpetuity; an indefinite duration.

Nothing could make me sooner to confess,
That this world had an everlastingness,
Than to consider that a year is run
Since both this lower world's and the sun's sun
Did set. Donne.

EVERLIVING. adj. [ever and living.]
Living without end; immortal; eternal; incessant.

Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
To that most glorious house, that glist'eth bright
With burning stars and everliving fires? F. Queen.

In that he is man, he received life from the Father, as from the fountain of that everliving Deity. Hooker.

God's justice in the one, and his goodness in the other, is exercised for evermore, as the everliving subjects of his reward and punishment. Raleigh.
The instinct of brutes and insects can be the effect of nothing else than the wisdom and skill of a powerful everliving agent. Newton.

EVERMORE. adv. [ever and more.] Always; eternally. More seems an expletive accidentally added, unless it signified originally from this time: as, evermore, always, henceforward; but this sense has not been strictly preserved.

It govern'd was, and guided evermore,
Through wisdom of a mastron grave and hoare. Fairy Queen.

Sparks by nature evermore aspire,
Which makes them now to such a highness flee. Donne.

Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God for evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tindalson.

EVEROPEN. adj. [ever and open.] Never closed; not at any time shut.

God is the great eye of the world, always watching over our actions, and has an everopen ear to all our words. Taylor.

EVERPLEASING. adj. [ever and pleasing.]
Delighting at all times; never ceasing to give pleasure.

The everpleasing Pamela was content to urge a little further for me. Sidney.

Forsoaking Sheria's everpleasing shore,
The winds to Marathon the virgin bore. Pope.

TO EVERSE. v. a. [eversus, Latin.] To overthrow; to subvert; to destroy. Not used.

The foundation of this principle is totally everse'd by the ingenious commentator upon immaterial beings. Glanville.

TO EVERT. v. a. [everso, Latin.] To destroy; to overthrow.

A process is valid, if the jurisdiction of the judge is not yet evered and overthrown. Styliffe.

EVERWATCHFUL. adj. [ever and watchful.] Always vigilant.

Plac'd at the helm he sat, and mark'd the skies,
Nor clos'd in sleep his everwatchful eyes. Pope.

EVERY. adj. [In old language everich, that is ever each; æpep ealc, Saxon.]

1. Each one of all. Every has therefore no plural signification.

He propoeth unto God their necessities, and they their own requests for relief in every of them. Hooker.

All the congregation are holy, every one of them. Numbers.

The king made this ordinance, that every twelve years there should be set forth two ships. Bacon.

The virtue and force of every of these three is shrewdly allayed. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Aristotle has long since observed, how unreasonable it is to expect the same kind of proof for every thing, which we have for some things. Tillotson.

Every one, that has an idea of a foot, finds that he can repeat that idea, and, joining it to the former, make the idea of two feet. Locke.

From pole to pole the thunder roars aloud,
And broken lightnings flash from every cloud. Pope's Statius.

2. EVERY-WHERE. In all places; in each place.

The substance of the body of Christ was not every-where seen, nor did it every-where suffer death; every-where it could not be entombed; it is not every-where now, being exalted into heaven. Hoskins.

If I send my son abroad, how is it possible to keep him from vice, which is every-where so in fashion? Locke.

'Tis no-where to be found, or every-where. Pope.

EVERYOUNG. adj. [ever and young.] Not subject to old age, or decaying; undecaying.

Joys everyyoung, unmix'd with pain or fear,
Fill the wide circle of th' eternal year. Pope.

EYESDROPPER. n. f. [eyes and dropper.] Some mean fellow that skulks about a house in the night to listen.

What makes you listening there? Get farther off; I preach not to thee, thou wicked eyesdropper. Dryden's Spanish Fryer.

Do but think how becoming your function it is to be disguised like a slave, and an eyesdropper, under the women's windows. Dryden.

TO EYE-STIGATE. v. a. [eyefigo, Latin.] To search out.

EUGEN. n. f. [This word is so written by most writers; but since the original is, Saxon, or Welsh yewen, more favours the easier orthography of yew, I have referred it thither.] A tree.

At the first stretch of both his hands he drew,
And almost joined the horns of the tough yew. Dryden's Æneid.

TO EVICT. v. a. [evinceo, Latin.]

1. To dispossess of by a judicial course.

The law of England would speedily evict them out of their possession, and therefore they held it the best policy to cast off the yoke of English law. Dryden on Ireland.

2. To take away by a sentence of law.

His lands were evicted from him. King James' Declaration.

3. To prove; to evince. Little used.

Many brave young minds have oftentimes, through hearing the praises and famous eulogies of worthy men, been stirred up to affect the like commendations.

If some men's appetites find more melody in discord, than in the harmony of the angelic quires; yet even these seldom miss to be affected with eulogies given themselves.

EUNUCH. n. f. [εὐνοῦχος.] One that is castrated or emasculated.

He hath gelded the common wealth, and made it an eunuch.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much of Venus doth dim the sight, and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless also dimighted.

So charm'd you were, you ceas'd awhile to
doat

On nonsense garg'd in an eunuch's throat.

from hell.

EVOLATION. n. f. [evolo, Latin.] The act of flying away.

TO EVO'LTE. v. a. [evolve, Latin.] To unfold; to disentangle.

The animal soul sooner expands and evolves itself to its full orb and extent than the human soul.

This little active principle, as the body increaseth and dilateth, evolves, diffuseth, and expandeth, if not his substantial existence, yet his energy.

TO EVO'VE. v. a. To open itself; to disclose itself.

Ambrosial odours
Does round the air evolving scents diffuse;
The holy ground is wet with heav'nly dews.

EVOLUTION. n. f. [evolutus, Latin.] 1. The act of unrolling or unfolding.

The spontaneous coagulation of the little saline bodies was preceded by almost innumerable evolutions, which were so various, that the little bodies came to obvert to each other those parts by which they might be best fastened together.

2. The series of things unrolled or unfolded.

The whole evolution of ages, from everlasting to everlasting, is so collectedly and presentifically represented to God at once, as if all things which ever were, are, or shall be, were at this very instant really present.

3. [In geometry.] The equable evolution of the periphery of a circle, or any other curve, is such a gradual approach of the circumference to rectitude, as that all its parts do meet together, and equally evolve or unbend; so that the same line becomes successively a less arch of a re-ciprocally greater circle, 'till at last they turn into a straight line.

That was excellently observed, says I, when I read a passage in an author, where his opinion agrees with mine. Swift.

2. To an eminent degree.

Comedy is both excellently instructive and extremely pleasant; satire lashes vice into reformation; and humour represents folly, so as to render it ridiculous. Dryden.

To EXCEPT. v. a. [excipio, Latin.]

1. To leave out, and specify as left out of a general precept, or position.

But when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest, that he is excepted which did put all things under him. Corinthians.

Adam, behold

Th' effects, which thy original crime hath wrought
In some to spring from thee, who never touch'd
Th' excepted tree. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To EXCEPT. v. n. To object; to make objections.

A succession which our author could not except against. Locke.

EXCEPT. preposit. [from the verb. This word, long taken as a preposition or conjunction, is originally the participle passive of the verb; which, like most others, had for its participle two terminations, except or excepted. All except one, is all, one excepted. Except may likewise be, according to the Teutonic idiom, the imperative mood: all, except one; that is, all but one, which you must except.]

1. Exclusively of; without inclusion of.

Richard excepts, those whom we fight against,
Had rather have us win than him they follow. Shakspeare.

God and his son excepts,

Nought valued he nor fear'd. Milton.

2. Unless; if it be not so that.

It is necessary to know our duty, because 'tis necessary for us to do it; and it is impossible to do it, except we know it. Sturgeson.

EXCEPTING. preposition. [from except. See

EXCEPT.] Without inclusion of; with exception of. An improper word.

May I not live without controul and awe, Excepting still the letter of the law? Dryden.

People come into the world in Turkey the same way they do here, and yet, excepting the royal family, they get but little by it. Cobbler.

EXCEPTION. n. f. [from except; exceptio, Latin.]

1. Exclusion from the things comprehended in a precept, or position; exclusion of any person from a general law.

When God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures to Noah and his family, we find no exception at all; but that Cham stood as fully invested with this right as any of his brethren. Saunders.

Let the money be raised on land, with an exception to some of the more barren parts, that might be tax-free. Addison.

2. It should have from before the rule or law to which the exception refers; but it is sometimes inaccurately used with to.

Pleads, in exception to all general rules,
Your taste of follies, with our scorn of souls. Pope.

3. Thing excepted, or specified in exception.

Every act of parliament was not previous to what it enacted; unless those two, by which the earl of Strafford and Sir John Fenwick lost their heads may pass for exceptions. Swift.

Who first taught souls enslav'd, and realms undone,
Th' enormous faith of many made for one;
That proud exception to all nature's laws,
T' invert the world and counterwork its cause. Pope.

4. Objection; cavil; with against or to.

Your assertion hath drawn us to make search whether these be just exceptions against the customs of our church, when ye plead that they are the same which the church of Rome hath, or that they are not the same which some other reformed churches have devised. Hooker.

He may have exceptions peremptory against the jurors, of which he then shall shew cause. Spenser.

Revelations will soon be discerned to be extremely conducive to reforming men's lives, such as will answer all objections and exceptions of flesh and blood against it. Hammond.

I will answer what exceptions they can have against our account, and confute all the reasons and explications they can give of their own. Bentley.

5. Peevish dislike; offence taken; sometimes with to.

I fear'd to shew my father Julia's letter,
Lest he should take exception to my love. Shakspeare.

6. Sometimes with at.

He first took exception at this badge,
Pronouncing, that the paleness of this flow'r Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart. Shakspeare.

7. Sometimes with against.

Roderigo, thou hast taken against me an exception; but I protest I have dealt most directly in thy affair. Shakespeare.

8. In this sense it is commonly used with the verb take.

He gave Sir James Tirrel great thanks; but took exception to the place of their burial, being too base for them that were king's children. Bacon.

EXCEPTIONABLE. adj. [from exception.] Liable to objection.

The only piece of pleasantry in Milton is where the evil spirits rally the angels upon the success of their artillery: this passage I look upon to be the most exceptionable in the whole poem. Addison.

EXCEPTIOUS. adj. [from except.] Peevish; froward; full of objections; quarrelsome.

They are so supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptious, that they are not only short of the true character of friendship, but become the very foes of society. South.

EXCEPTIVE. adj. [from except.] Including an exception.

Exceptive propositions will make complex syllogisms, as none but physicians came to the consultation: the nurse is no physician, therefore the nurse came not to the consultation. Watts.

EXCEPTLESS. adj. [from except.] Omitting or neglecting all exception; general; universal. Not in use.

Forgive my general and exceptless rashness, Perpetual sober gods! I do proclaim One honest man. Shakespeare's Troian.

3. That which rises in vapours, and sometimes takes the form of meteors.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,
No 'scape of nature, no distemper'd day,
But they would pluck away its nat'ral cause,
And call them meteors, prodiges, and signs.
Shakespeare.

Moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre, he must needs, as the sun, raise many envious exhalations; when, condensed, by a popular odium, are capable to cast a cloud upon the brightest merit and integrity.
King Charles.

A fabrick huge

Rose like an exhalation with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet.
Milton.

It is no wonder if the earth be often shaken, there being quantities of exhalations within those mines, or cavernous passages, that are capable of rarefaction and inflammation.
Burnet.

The growing tow'rs like exhalations rise,
And the huge calumns heave into the skies.
Pope.

To EXHALE. v. a. [exhalo, Latin.]

1. To send or draw out in vapours or fumes.

Yon light is not daylight, I know it well:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer.
Shaksp.

I flattered myself with the hopes that the vapour had been exhaled.
Temple.

Fear freezes minds; but love, like heat,
Exhales the soul sublime to seek her native seat.
Dryden.

2. To draw out.

See, dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh!
Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity!
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood
From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells!
Shakespeare.

EXHALEMENT. n. f. [from exhale.] Matter exhaled; vapour.

Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross and corporal exhalement, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scales.
Brown.

To EXHAUST. v. a.

1. To drain; to diminish; to deprive by draining.

Single men be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhausted.
Bacon.

Spermatick matter of a vitious sort abounds in the blood, exhausts it of its best spirits, and deprives the flower of it to the seminal vessels.
Wise's Surgery.

2. To draw out totally; to draw until nothing is left.

Though the knowledge they have left us be worth our study, yet they exhausted not all its treasures; they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after-ages.
Locke.

The nursing grove
Seems fair awhile, cherish'd with softer earth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails.
Phillips.

EXHAUSTION. n. f. [from exhaust.] The act of drawing or draining.

EXHAUSTIBLE. adj. [from exhaust.] Not to be emptied; not to be all drawn off; inexhaustible.

Of heat and light, what everdureing stores
Brought from the sun's exhaustless golden shores,
Through gulphs immense of intervening air,
Enrich the earth, and every loss repair.
Blackm.

To EXHIBIT. v. a. [exhibeo, Latin.]

1. To offer to view or use; to offer or propose in a formal or publick manner.

If any claim redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street. Shakspeare.
He suffered his attorney-general to exhibit a charge of high treason against the earl. Clarendon.

2. To show; to display.

One of an unfortunate constitution is perpetually exhibiting a miserable example of the weakness of mind and body. Pope.

EXHIBITER. n. f. [from exhibit.] He that offers any thing, as a petition or charge, in a publick manner.

He seems indifferent,
Or rather swaying more upon our part,
Than cherishing th' exhibitors against us. Shaksp.

EXHIBITION. n. f. [from exhibit.]

1. The act of exhibiting; display; setting forth.

What are all mechanick works, but the sensible exhibition of mathematick demonstrations? Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

2. Allowance; salary; pension: it is much used for pensions allowed to scholars at the university.

I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due preference of place and exhibition,
As levels with her breeding. Shakspeare.

What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me. Shaksp.

All was assigned to the army and garrisons there, and he received only a pension or exhibition out of his coffers. Bacon.

He is now neglected, and driven to live in exile upon a small exhibition. Swift.

3. Payment; recompence.

I would not do such a thing for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition. Shaksp.

EXHIBITIVE. adj. [from exhibit.] Representative; displaying.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather, they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously exhibitiv or representative, according to various modes of imitability or participation. Norris.

To EXHILARATE. v. a. [exhilaro, Latin.] To make cheerful; to cheer; to fill with mirth; to enliven; to glad; to gladden.

The coming into a fair garden, the coming into a fair room richly furnished, a beautiful person, and the like, do delight and exhilarate the spirits much. Bacon's Natural Hist.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapours bland
About their spirits, had play'd, and inmost powers Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

Let them thank
Boon nature, that thus annually supplies
Their vaults, and with her former liquid gifts Exhilarates their languid minds within The golden rcean confin'd. Philips.

EXHILARATION. n. f. [from exhilarate.]

1. The act of giving gayety.

2. The state of being enlivened.

Exhilaration hath some affinity with joy, though it be a much lighter motion. Bacon.

To EXHORT. v. a. [exhortor, Latin.]

To incite by words to any good action.

We beseech you, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us, how you ought to walk, so ye would abound. Thess.

My duty is to exhort you to consider the dignity of that holy mystery. Common Prayer.

Defigning or exhorting glorious war. Milton.

EXHORTATION. n. f. [from exhort.]

1. The act of exhorting; incitement to good.

If we will not encourage publick beneficence, till we are secure that no storm shall overturn what we help to build, there is no room for exhortations to charity. Atterbury.

2. The form of words by which one is exhorted.

I'll end my exhortation after dinner. Shaksp.

EXHORTATORY. adj. [from exhort.] Tending to exhort.

EXHORTER. n. f. [from exhort.] One who exhorts or encourages by words.

To EXICCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Lat.] To dry; to dry up. Did.

EXICCATION. n. f. [from exiccate.] Arefaction; act of drying up; state of being dried up.

What is more easily refuted than that old vulgar addition of an universal drought and exiccation of the earth? As if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never deluged again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere. Bentley.

EXICCATIVE. adj. [from exiccate.] Drying in quality; having the power of drying.

EXIGENCE. } n. f. [This word is probably only a corruption of exigent, vitiated by an unskilful pronunciation.]

1. Demand; want; need.

As men, we are at our own choice, both for time and place and form, according to the exigence of our own occasions in private. Hooker.

You have heard what the present condition and exigencies of these several charities are. Atterb.

While our fortunes exceed not the measure of real convenience, and are adapted to the exigencies of our station, we perceive the hand of Providence in our gradual and successive supplies. Rogers.

2. Pressing necessity; distress; sudden occasion.

This dissimulation in war may be called stratagem and conduct; in other exigencies address and dexterity. Broom.

Now in such exigencies not to need,
Upon my word you must be rich indeed!
A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves. Pope.

EXIGENT. n. f. [exigens, Latin.]

1. Pressing business; occasion that requires immediate help.

In such an exigent I see not how they could have staid to deliberate about any other regiment than that which already was devoted to their hands. Hooker, Preface.

The council met, your guards to find you sent,
And know your pleasure in this exigent. Waller.

2. [A law term.] A writ sued when the defendant is not to be found, being part of the process leading to an outlawry. Shakspeare uses it for any extremity. Hammer.

3. End.

These eyes, like lamps whose waiting oil is spent,
Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent. Shaksp.

EXIGUITY. n. f. [exiguus, Lat.] Smallness; diminutiveness; slenderness.

The exiguity and shape of the extant particles is now supposed. Boyle on Colours.

EXIGUOUS. adj. [exiguus, Latin.] Small; diminutive; little. Not used.

Their subtle parts and exiguous dose are consumed and evaporated in less than two hours time. Harvey.

EXILE. n. f. [exilium, Latin.] It seems anciently to have had the accent indifferently on either syllable; now it is uniformly on the first.]

1. Banishment; state of being banished from one's country.

Our state of bodies would bewray what life
We've led since thy exile. Shakspeare.
Welcome is exile, welcome were my death. Shakspeare.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger,
But with a grain of day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakspeare.

2. The person banished.

O must the wretched exiles ever mourn,
Nor after length of rowling years return? Dryd.
Ulysses, sole of all the victor train,
An exile from his dear paternal coast,
Deplor'd his absent queen, and empire lost. Pope.

EXILE. adj. [exilis, Latin.] Small; slender; not full; not powerful. Not in use, except in philosophical writings.

It were good to enquire what means may be to draw forth the exile heat which is in the air; for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather. Bacon.

In a virginal, when the lid is down, it maketh a more exile sound than when the lid is open. Bacon's Natural History.

To EXILE. v. a. [from the noun. This had formerly the accent on the last syllable, now generally on the first, though Dryden has used both.] To banish; to drive from a country; to transport.

Call home our exile'd friends abroad,
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny. Shaksp.
Foul subordination is predominant,
And equity exile'd your highness' land. Shaksp.

For that offence,
Immediately we do exile him hence. Shakspeare.
They, fettered with the bonds of a long night,
lay there exiled from the eternal Providence. Widom.

His brutal manners from his breast exile'd,
His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd. Dryden.

Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,
Expel'd and exile'd. Dryden.

EXILEMENT. n. f. [from exile.] Banishment.

Fitzsborn was discarded into foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Warren.

EXILIATION. n. f. [exiliatio, Latin.] The act of springing or rushing out suddenly.

From saltpetre proceedeth the force and report of gunpowder: for sulphur and small-coal mixt, will not make fire with noise or exilition; and powder which is made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Brown.

EXILITY. n. f. [exilis, Latin.] Slenderness; smallness; diminution.

Certain flies called ephemeræ, live but a day: the cause is the exility of the spirit, or perhaps the absence of the sun. Bacon.

For exility of the voice, or other sounds, it is certain that the voice doth pass through solid and hard bodies, if they be not too thick; and through water, which is likewise a very close body, and such an one as letteth not in air. Bacon.

A body, by being subtilized, can lose nothing of its corporeity; neither can it hereby gain any thing but exility; for all degrees of subtilty are essentially the same thing. Grew.

EXIMIOUS. adj. [eximius, Lat.] Famous; eminent; conspicuous; excellent. Did.

EXINATION. n. f. [exinatio, Latin.] Privation; loss.

He is not more impotent in his glory than he was in his examination. Decay of Intel.

To EXIST. v. n. [existo, Latin.] To be; to have a being.

It is as easy to conceive that an Almighty Power might produce a thing out of nothing, and make that to exist de novo, which did not exist before; as to conceive the world to have had no beginning, but to have existed from eternity.

It seems reasonable to enquire, how such a multitude comes to make but one idea, since that combination does not always exist together in nature.

One year is past, a different scene!
No farther mention of the dead;
Who now, alas, no more is mist
Than if he never did exist.

EXISTENCE. } n. f. [existentia, low Lat.]
EXISTENCY. } State of being; actual possession of being.

Nor is only the existence of this animal considerable, but many things delivered thereof.

It is impossible any being can be eternal with successive eternal physical changes, or variety of states or manner of existence, naturally and necessarily concomitant unto it.

The soul, secur'd in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger, and defies its point.

When a being is considered as possible, it is said to have an essence or nature: such were all things before the creation. When it is considered as actual, then it is said to have existence also.

EXISTENT. adj. [from exist.] Having being; in possession of being or of existence.

Whatever sign the sun possessed, whose recess or vicinity defineth the quarters of the year, those seasons were actually existent.

The eyes and minds are fastened on objects which have no real being, as if they were truly existent.

EXISTIMATION. n. f. [existimatio, Latin.]

1. Opinion.
2. Esteem.

EXIT. n. f. [exit, Latin.]

1. The term set in the margin of plays to mark the time at which the player goes off the stage.
2. Retreat; departure; act of quitting the stage; act of quitting the theatre of life.

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players:
They have their exits and their entrances,
And one man in his time plays many parts.

A regard for fame becomes a man more towards the exit than at his entrance into life.

Many of your old comrades live a short life, and make a figure at their exit.

3. Passage out of any place.
In such a pervious substance as the brain, they might find an easy either entrance or exit, almost every where.
4. Way by which there is a passage out.
The fire makes its way, forcing the water forth through its ordinary exits, wells, and the outlets of rivers.

EXITIAL. } adj. [exitialis, Latin.] De-EXITIOUS. } structive; fatal; mortal; deleterious. Not in use.

Most exitial fevers, although not concomitant with the tokens, exanthemata, anthracis, or carbuncles, are to be censured pestilential.

EXODUS. } n. f. [ἔξοδος.] Departure;
EXODY. } journey from a place: the second book of Moses is so called, because it describes the journey of the Israelites from Egypt.

In all probability their years continued to be three hundred and sixty-five days, ever since the time of the Jewish exodus at least.

EXOLET. adj. [exoletus, Latin.] Obsolete; out of use.

TO EXOLVE. v. a. [exolvere, Latin.] To loose; to pay.

EXOLUTION. n. f. [exolutio, Latin.] Laxation of the nerves.

Considering the exolution and languor ensuing that action in some, we cannot but think it much abridgeth our days.

EXO'MPHALOS. n. f. [ἔξ and ὀμφαλός.] A navel rupture.

TO EXONERATE. v. a. [exonero, Lat.] To unload; to disburden; to free from any heavy charge.

The glands being a congeries of vessels curled, circumscribed, and complicated, give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory ones, which afterwards all exonerate themselves into one common ductus.

EXONERATION. n. f. [from exonerate.] The act of disburdening, or discharging.

The body is adapted unto eating, drinking, nutrition, and other ways of repletion and exoneration.

EXO'PTABLE. adj. [exoptabilis, Latin.] Desirable; to be sought with eagerness or desire.

EXORABLE. adj. [exorabilis, Latin.] To be moved by entreaty.

EXORBITANCE. } n. f. [from exorbitant.]
EXORBITANCY. }

1. The act of going out of the tracks prescribed.
2. Enormity; gross deviation from rule or right.

I see some of this fault cleave to those, who have eminently corrected all other exorbitancies of the tongue.

The reverence of my presence may be a curb to your exorbitancies.

The people were grossly imposed on, to commit such exorbitancies as could not end but in the dissolution of the government.

3. Boundless depravity.
Unbounded in exorbitancy of ill.

EXORBITANT. adj. [ex and orbito, Lat.]

1. Going out of the prescribed track.
2. Deviating from the course appointed or rule established.

What signifies the fiction of the tortoise riding upon the wings of the wind, but to prescribe bounds and measures to our exorbitant passions;

These phenomena are not peculiar to earthquakes in our times, but have been observed in all ages, and particularly those exorbitant commotions of the waters of the globe.

3. Anomalous; not comprehended in a settled rule or method.

The Jews who had laws so particularly determining in all affairs what to do, were notwithstanding continually inured with causes exorbitant, and such as their laws had not provided for.

4. Enormous; beyond due proportion; excessive.

Their subjects would live in great plenty, were not the impositions so very exorbitant; for the courts are too splendid for the territories.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less.

TO EXORBITATE. v. n. [ex and orbito, Latin.] To deviate; to go out of the track or road prescribed.

The planets sometimes would have approached the sun as near as the orb of Mercury, and sometimes have exorbitated beyond the distance of Saturn.

TO EXORCISE. v. a. [ἑξορκίζω.]

1. To adjure by some holy name.
2. To drive away spirits by certain forms of adjuration.
3. To purify from the influence of malignant spirits by religious ceremonies.

And fry'rs, that through the wealthy regions run,
Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,
And exorcise the beds, and crust the walls.

EXORCISER. n. f. [from exorcise.] One who practises to drive away evil spirits.

EXORCISM. n. f. [ἑξορκισμός.] The form of adjuration, or religious ceremony by which evil and malignant spirits are driven away.

Will his lordship behold and hear our exorcism?
Symptoms supernatural, must be only curable by supernatural means; namely, by devout prayers or exorcisms.

EXORCIST. n. f. [ἑξορκιστής.]

1. One who by adjurations, prayers, or religious acts, drives away malignant spirits.
2. An enchanter; a conjuror. Improperly.

Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits.

Thou, like an exorcist, had conjur'd up
My mortified spirit.

Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?
Is't real that I see?

EXORDIUM. n. f. [Latin.] A formal preface; the proemial part of a composition.

Now will I thee detain
With poets' fictions, nor oppress thine ear
With circumstance, and long exordiums here.

I have been disflatt at this way of writing, by reason of long prefaces and exordiums.

EXORNATION. n. f. [exornatio, Latin.] Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

It seemeth that all those curious exornations should rather cease.

Hyperbolic exornations and elegancies many much affect.

EXO'STATED. adj. [exostatus, Latin.] Deprived of bones.

EXOSTOSIS. n. f. [ἑξ and ὄστος.] Any protuberance of a bone that is not natural, as often happens in venereal cases.

EXO'SSEOUS. adj. [ex and ossa, Latin.] Wanting bones; boneless; formed without bones.

Thus we daily observe in the heads of fishes, as also in snails and soft exosseous animals, nature near the head hath placed a flat white stone, or testaceous concretion.

EXO'TICK. adj. [ἑξωτικός.] Foreign; not produced in our own country; not domestic.

Some learned men treat of the nature of letters as of some remote exotick thing, wherof we had no knowledge but by fabulous relations.

Continue fresh hot-beds to entertain such exotick plants as arrive not to their perfection without them.

EXO'TICK. n. f. A foreign plant.

Claudian was seated on the other summit, which was barren, and produced, on some spots, plants that are unknown to Italy, and such as the gardeners call exoticks. Addison's Guard.

To EXPA'ND. v. a. [expando, Latin.]

1. To spread; to lay open as a net or sheet.
2. To dilate; to spread out every way; to diffuse.

She useth most the target to fence away the blow, and leaves all other weapons to the Acheron to propagate and expand itself. Howel.

Bellerophon's horse framed of iron, and placed between two loadstones, with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown.

An animal growing, expands its fibres in the air as a fluid. Arbutnot on Air.

Along the stream of time thy name Expanded flies and gathers all its fame. Pope.

EXPA'NSE. n. f. [expansum, Latin.] A body widely extended without inequalities.

A murmuring sound

Of waters issue from a cave, and spread Into a liquid plain; then stood unmov'd, Pure as th' expanse of heav'n. Milton.

Bright as th' ethereal glows the green expanse. Savage.

On the smooth expanse of crystal lakes, The sinking stone at first a circle makes; The trembling surface, by the motion stir'd, Spreads in a second circle, then a third; Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance, Fill all the wat'ry plain, and to the margin dance. Pope.

EXPANSIBILITY. n. f. [from expansible.] Capacity of extension; possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.

With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another; else all fluids would be alike in weight, expansibility, and all other qualities. Grew.

EXPANSIBLE. adj. [from expansus, Lat.] Capable to be extended; capable to spread into a wider surface.

Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded. Grew.

EXPANSION. n. f. [from expand.]

1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.

'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it. Bentley.

2. The act of spreading out.

The easy expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight. Grew.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended.

The capacious mind of man cannot be confined by the limits of the world: it extends its thoughts even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes incursions into that incomprehensible inane. Locke.

4. Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter.

Distance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which expresses this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter. Locke.

It would for ever take an useless flight, Lost in expansion, void and infinite. Blackmore.

EXPANSIVE. adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space.

The elastic or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather glass. Ray on the Creation.

Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold. Thomson.

To EXPA'TIATE. v. n. [expatrio, Latin.]

1. To range at large; to rove without any prescribed limits.

Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatriate in. Addison's Spectator.

He looks in heav'n with more than mortal eyes, Bids his free soul expatriate in the skies; Amidst her kindred stars familiar roam, Survey the region, and confess her home. Pope.

Expatriate free o'er all this scene of man; A mighty maze! but not without a plan. Pope.

With wonder seiz'd, we view the pleasing ground, And walk delighted, and expatriate round. Pope.

2. To enlarge upon in language.

They had a custom of offering the tongues to Mercury, because they believed him the giver of eloquence: Dacier expatriates upon this custom. Broom.

3. To let loose; to allow to range. This sense, which is active, is very improper.

Make choice of a subject, which, being of itself capable of all that colours and the elegance of design can possibly give, shall afterwards afford an ample field of matter wherein to expatriate itself. Dryden.

To EXPECT. v. a. [expecto, Latin.]

1. To have a previous apprehension of either good or evil.

We expected

Immediate dissolution. Milton.

Needs must the serpent now his capital bruise

Expect with mortal pain. Milton.

Good with bad

Expect to hear, supernal grace contending

With sinfulness of man. Milton.

Ere, now expect great tidings. Milton.

2. To wait for; to attend the coming.

The guards,

By me encamp'd on yonder hill, expect

Their motion. Milton.

While, expecting there the queen, he rais'd

His wond'ring eyes, and round the temple gaz'd. Dryden.

To EXPECT. v. n. To wait; to stay.

Elihu had expected till Job had spoken. Job.

EXPECTABLE. adj. [from expect.] To be expected; to be hoped or feared.

Occult and spiritual operations are not expectable from ice; for being but water congealed, it can never make good such qualities. Brown.

EXPECTANCE. } n. f. [from expect.]

EXPECTANCY. }

1. The act or state of expecting; expectation.

Every moment is expectancy

Of more arrival. Shakespeare's Othello.

Satyrs leave your petulance,

Or else rail upon the moon,

Your expectancy is too soon;

For before the second cock

Crow, the gates will not unlock. Ben Jonson.

This blessed expectancy must be now my theme

But sy, my wand'ring muse, how thou dost stay! Boyle.

Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.

2. Something expected.

There is expectancy here from both the sides,

What further you will do. Shakespeare.

3. Hope; that of which the expectation is accompanied with pleasure.

Oh, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!

The expectancy and rose of the fair state. Shaksp.

EXPECTANT. adj. [French.] Waiting in expectation.

Her majesty has offered concessions in order to remove scruples raised in the mind of the expectant heir. Stowe.

EXPECTANT. n. f. [from expect.] One who waits in expectation of any thing; one held in dependence by his hopes.

They, vain expectants of the bridal hour,

My stores in riotous expence devour. Pope.

This treatise was agreeable to the whole nation, except those who had employments, or were expectants. Swift to Pope.

EXPECTATION. n. f. [expectatio, Lat.]

1. The act of expecting.

The trees

Should have loose men, and expectation fainted

Languing for what it had not. Shakspere.

The rest,

That are within the note of expectation,

Already are t' th' court. Shakspere's Macb.

'Tis expectation makes a bidding dear. Congreve.

2. The state of expecting either with hope or fear.

Live in a constant and serious expectation of that day, when we must appear before the Judge of heaven and earth. Rogers' Sermons.

3. Prospect of any thing good to come.

My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him. Psalms.

4. The object of happy expectation; the Messiah expected.

Now clear I understand,

What oft my readiest thoughts have search'd in vain,

Why our great expectation should be call'd

The Seed of woman. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. A state in which something excellent is expected from us.

How fit it will be for you, born to great a prince, and of so rare not only expectation but proof, to divert your thoughts from the way of goodness. Sidney.

You first came home

From travel with such hopes as made you look'd on,

By all men's eyes, a youth of expectation;

Pleas'd with your growing virtue I receiv'd you. Orway.

EXPECTER. n. f. [from expect.]

1. One who has hopes of something.

There are not great expecters under your administration, according to the period of governors here. Swift.

2. One who waits for another.

Signify this loving interview

To the expecters of our Trojan part. Shakspere.

To EXPECTORATE. v. a. [ex and pectus, Lat.] To eject from the breast.

Excrementitious humours are expectorated by a cough after a cold or an asthma. Huxley.

Morbific matter is either attenuated so as to be returned into the channels, or expectorated by coughing. Arbutnot.

EXPECTORATION. n. f. [from expectorate.]

1. The act of discharging from the breast.

2. That discharge which is made by coughing, as bringing up phlegm, or any thing that obstructs the vessels of the lungs, and straitens the breath.

With water, vinegar, and honey, in pleurifies and inflammations of the lungs, he mixeth spices, for promoting expectoration. Arbutnot.

EXPECTORATIVE. adj. [from expectorate.]

Having the quality of promoting ex-pectoration.

Syrups and other expectoratives, in coughs, must necessarily occasion a greater cough. Huxley on Consumptions.

EXPEDIENCE. } n. f. [from expedient.]

EXPEDIENCY. }

1. Fitness; propriety; suitability to an end.

Solemn dedications of things set apart for Divine Worship, could never have been universally

- practised, had not right reason dictated the high expediency and great use of such practices. South.
2. It is used in Shakspeare for expedition; adventure; or attempt.

Let me hear
What yesternight our council did decree,
In forwarding this dear expedience. Shakspeare.

3. It is also used by Shakspeare for expedition; haste; dispatch.

I shall break
The cause of our expedience to the queen,
And get her leave to part. Shakspeare.
Eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expedience.
Shakspeare's Rich. II.

EXPEDIENT. adj. [expedit, Latin.]

1. Proper; fit; convenient; suitable.
- All things are not expedient: in things indifferent there is a choice; they are not always equally expedient. Hooker.

When men live as if there were no God, it becomes expedient for them that there should be none; and then they endeavour to persuade themselves so. Tillotson.

2. In Shakspeare, quick; expeditious.

The adverse winds
Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time
To land his legions all as soon as I:
His marches are expedient to this town. Shakspeare.

EXPEDIENT. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. That which helps forward, as means to an end.

God does not project for our sorrow, but our innocence; and would never have invited us to the one, but as an expedient to the other. Decay of Piety.

2. A shift; means to an end which are contrived in an exigence, or difficulty.

Th' expedient pleas'd, where neither lost his right;
Mars had the day, and Venus had the night. Dryden.

He flies to a new expedient to solve the matter, and supposes an earth of a make and frame like that of Des Cartes. Woodward.

EXPEDIENTLY. adv. [from expedient.]

1. Fitly; suitably; conveniently.
2. Hastily; quickly. Not used.

Let my officers of such a nature

1. To drive out; to force away.

The Lord your God shall expel them from before you, and drive them from out of your sight. Job.

I may know the let why gentle peace
Should not expel these inconveniences. Shakspeare.

Suppose a mighty rock to fall there, it would expel the waters out of their places with such violence as to fling them among the clouds. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. To eject; to throw out.

Whatever cannot be digested by the stomach, is either put up by vomit, or put down to the guts, and other parts of the body are moved to expel by consent. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The virgin huntress was not slow
To expel the shaft from her contracted bow. Dryden.

3. To banish; to drive from the place of residence.

Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,

4. To reject; to refuse.

And would you not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you t' accompany,
In this adventurous chancelous jeopardy. Hub. To.

5. To keep off; to exclude; to keep out.

Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And threw her sun expelling mask away,
The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shakspeare.
Oh that that earth which kept the world in awe
Would patch a wall, expel the winter's flaw! Shakspeare.

EXPELLER. n. f. [from expel.] One that expels or drives away.

TO EXPEND. v. a. [expendo, Latin.] To lay out; to spend.

If my death might make this island happy,
I would expend it with all willingness. Shakspeare.

The king of England wasted the French king's country, and thereby caused him to expend such sums of money as exceeded the debt. Hayward.

The publick burthens, though they may be a good reason for our not expending so much in charity, yet will not justify us in giving nothing. Atterbury.

EXPENSE. n. f. [expensum, Lat.] Cost;

charges; money expended.

Hence comes that wild and vast expense,
That hath enforc'd Rome's virtue thence,
Which simple poverty first made. Ben Jonson.

A feast prepar'd with riotous expense,
Much cost, more care, and most magnificence. Dryden.

Such provision made, that a country should not want so many springs as were convenient, and afford a supply every where suitable to the necessities and expenses of each climate. Woodward.

I can see no reason by which we are obliged to make those prodigious expenses. Swift.

EXPENSEFUL. adj. [expense and full]

Costly; chargeable; expensive.

No part of structure is either more expenseful than windows, or more ruinous. Watson.

EXPENSELESS. adj. [from expense.] Without cost.

A physician may save any army by this frugal and expenseless means only. Milton.

What health promotes, and gives uneasy'd peace,

Is all expenseless, and procur'd with ease. Blackmore.

EXPENSIVE. adj. [from expense.]

Their highways, for their extent, solidity, or expensiveness, are some of the greatest monuments of the grandeur of the Roman empire. Abb.

EXPERIENCE. n. f. [experientia, Lat.]

1. Practice; frequent trial.

Hereof experience hath informed reason, and time hath made those things apparent which were hidden. Raleigh.

But apt the mind or fancy is to rove
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end,
'Till warn'd, or by experience taught, the learn,
That not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle, but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom; what is more, is fume
Or emptiness, or fond impertinence,
And renders us in things that most concern
Unpractic'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.

2. Knowledge gained by trial and practice.

Boys immature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure. Shakspeare.

But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,
Whom age and long experience render wise. Pope.

TO EXPERIENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

He through the armed files
Darts his experienc'd eye. Milton.

EXPERIENCED. participial adj. [from experience.]

1. Made skilful by experience.

We must perfect, as much as we can, our ideas of the distinct species; or learn them from such as are used to that sort of things, and are experienced in them. Locke.

2. Wife by long practice.

To him experienc'd Nestor thus rejoind,
O friend! what sorrows do'st thou bring to mind! Pope.

EXPERIENCER. n. f. One who makes trials; a practiser of experiments.

A curious experienter did affirm, that the likeness of any object, if strongly enlightened, will appear to another, in the eye of him that looks strongly and steadily upon it, 'till he be dazzled by it; even after he shall have turned his eyes from it. Digby on Optics.

EXPERIMENT. n. f. [experimentum, Lat.] Trial of any thing; something done in order to discover an uncertain or unknown effect.

That which sheweth them to be wise, is the gathering of principles out of their own particular experiments; and the framing of our particular experiments, according to the rule of their principles, shall make us such as they are. Hooker.

It is good also not to try experiments in states, except the necessity be urgent, or the utility evident. Bacon.

Adam! by sad experiment I know,
How little weight with thee my words can find. Milton.

'Till his fall man's mind was ignorant of nothing but of sin; or, at least, it rested in the notion without the smart of the experiment. South's Sermons.

When we are searching out the nature or properties of any being by various methods of trial, this sort of observation is called experiment. Watts on the Mind.

To EXPERIMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To try; to search out by trial.

Francisco Redi experimented that no putrid flesh will of itself, if all insects be carefully kept from it, produce any. Ray on the Creation.

2. To know by experience.

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiments whilst he sleeps soundly. Locke.

EXPERIMENTAL. adj. [from experiment.]

1. Pertaining to experiment.

2. Built upon experiment; formed by observation.

Trust not my reading, nor my observations,
Which with experimental seal do warrant,
The tenor of my look. Shakespeare.

The experimental testimony of Gillius is most considerable of any, who beheld the course thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Known by experiment or trial.

We have no other evidence of universal impenetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception. Newton.

These are so far from being subservient to atheism in their audacious attempts, that they rather afford an experimental confirmation of the universal deluge. Bentley's Sermons.

EXPERIMENTALLY. adv. [from experimental.] By experience; by trial; by experiment; by observation.

The miscarriage being sometimes universal, has made us impart what we have experimentally learned by our own observations. Everlyn.

While the man is under the scourge of affliction, he is willing to abjure those sins which he now experimentally finds attended with such bitter consequences. Rogers's Sermons.

EXPERIMENTER. n. f. [from experiment.] One who makes experiment.

Galileus and Mosennus, two exact experimenters, do think they find this verity by their experiments; but surely this is impossible to be done. Digby on Optics.

EXPERT. adj. [expertus, Latin.]

1. Skilful; addressful; intelligent.

Now we will take some order in the town,
Placing therein some expert officers. Shakespeare.
Again fair Alma lies confest,
Oh Florimel's expert breast;
When the the rising sigh contrains,
And by concealing speaks her pains. Prior.

2. Ready; dexterous.

The meanest sculptor in th' Æmilian square,
Can imitate in brass the nail, and hair;
Expert in trifles, and a cunning fool,
Able t' express the parts, but not dispose the whole. Dryden.

They have not the good luck to be perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism, or expert in mode and figure. Locke.

3. Skilful by practice or experience. This sense is rare.

Expert men can execute, and judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshalling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. Bacon.

4. It is used by Pope with of before the object of skill, generally with in.

Thy offspring bloom,
Expert of arms, and prudent in debate,
The gifts of Heaven to guard thy hoary state. Pope's Odyssey.

EXPERTLY. adv. [from expert.] In a skilful, ready, and dexterous manner.

EXPERTNESS. n. f. [from expert.] Skill; Readiness; dexterity.

What his reputation, what his valour, honesty, and expertness in war. Shakespeare.

This army, for the expertness and valour of the soldiers, was thought sufficient to have met the greatest army of the Turks. Knox's History.

EXPIABLE. adj. [from expiate.] Capable to be expiated, or atoned.

To EXPIATE. v. a. [expiō, Latin.]

1. To annul the guilt of a crime by subsequent acts of piety; to atone for.

Strong and able petty felons, in true penitence, implore permission to expiate their crimes by their assiduous labours in so innocent and so hopeful a work. Bacon's Phys. Remains.

The odium which some men's rigour or remissness had contracted upon my government, I resolved to expiate by regulations. King Charles.

For the cure of this disease an humble, serious, hearty repentance is the only physick; not to expiate the guilt of it, but to qualify us to partake of the benefit of Christ's atonement. Ray.

2. To avert the threats of prodigies.

3. To make reparation for.

The treasurer obliged himself to expiate the injury, to procure some declaration to that purpose, under his majesty's sign manual. Clarendon.

The more they have hitherto embezzled their parts, the more they endeavour to expiate that unthriftness by a more careful managery for the future. Governor of the Tongue.

EXPIATION. n. f. [from expiate.]

1. The act of expiating or atoning for any crime.

2. The means by which we atone for crimes; atonement.

Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats. Milton.

The former part of this poem is but a due expiation for my not serving my king and country in it. Dryden.

Let a man's innocence be what it will, let his virtues rise to the highest pitch of perfection, there will be still in him so many secret sins, so many human frailties, so many offences of ignorance, passion, and prejudice, so many unguarded words and thoughts, that without the advantage of such an expiation and atonement, as Christianity has revealed to us, it is impossible he should be saved. Atanarso's Spectator.

3. Practices by which the threats of ominous prodigies were averted.

Upon the birth of such monsters, the Grecians and Romans did use divers sorts of expiations, and to go about their principal cities with many solemn ceremonies and sacrifices. Hayward.

EXPIATORY. adj. [from expiate.] Having the power of expiation or atonement.

His voluntary death for others prevailed with God, and had the force of an expiatory sacrifice. Hooker.

EXPIATION. n. f. [expilatio, Latin.]

Robbery; the act of committing waste upon land to the loss of the heir.

EXPIRATION. n. f. [from expire.]

1. That act of respiration which thrusts the air out of the lungs, and contracts the cavity of the breast. Quincy.

In all expiration the motion is outwards, and therefore rather driveth away the voice than draweth it. Bacon's Natural History.

Of an inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increases upon inspiration; by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The last emission of breath; death.

We have heard him breathe the groan of expiration. Rambler.

3. Evaporation; act of fuming out.

4. Vapour; matter expired.

Words of this sort resemble the wind in fury and impetuosity, in transiency and sudden expiration. Decay of Piety.

Close air is warmer than open air, as the cause of cold is an expiration from the earth, which in open places is stronger. Bacon's Natural History.

5. The cessation of any thing to which life is figuratively ascribed.

To satisfy ourselves of its expiration we darkened the room, and in vain endeavoured to discover any spark of fire. Boswell.

6. The conclusion of any limited time.

If 'till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me. Shakespeare's King Lear.

This he did in a fortnight after the expiration of the treaty of Uxbridge. Clarendon.

To EXPIRE. v. a. [expiro, Latin.]

1. To breathe out.

To save his body from the scorching fire,
Which he from hellish entrails did expire. Fairy Queen.

Anatomy exhibits the lungs in a continual motion of inspiring and expiring air. Harvey.

This chaff'd the bear; his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire. Dryden.

2. To exhale; to send out in exhalations.

The fluid which is thus secreted, and expired forth along with the air, goes off in insensible parcels. Woodward.

3. To close; to conclude; to bring to an end. Obsolete.

When as time flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that these two javels
Should render up a reck'ning of their travels. Hubbard's Tale.

To EXPIRE. v. m.

1. To make an emission of the breath.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stop'd, it suddenly dies. Walton.

2. To die; to breathe the last.

For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their first elements the souls retire. Pope.

3. To perish; to fall; to be destroyed.

All thy praise is vain,
Save what this verse, which never shall expire,
Shall to thee dedicate. Spenser.

The dead man's knell,
As there scarce ask'd, for whom; and good men's lives

Expire before the flowers in their cups, Dying ere they sicken. Shakespeare.

4. To fly out with a blast.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
The linlocks touch, the ponderous ball expires;
The vigorous seaman every port-hole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryd.

5. To conclude; to terminate; to come to an end.

A month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond.
Shakespeare.

To EXPLAIN. v. a. [explico, Lat.] To expound; to illustrate; to clear by notes or commentaries.

Such is the original design, however we may explain it away. Ayliffe's Parergon.

You will have variety of commentators to explain the difficult passages to you. Gay.

Some explained the meaning quite away. Pope.

EXPLAINABLE. adj. [from explain.] Capable of being explained or interpreted.

It is symbolically explainable, and implieth purification and cleanness. Brown.

EXPLAINER. n. f. [from explain.] Exp- ositor; interpreter; commentator.

EXPLANATION. n. f. [from explain.]

1. The act of explaining or interpreting.

2. The sense given by an explainer or in- terpreter.

Before this explanation be condemned, and the bill found upon us, some lawyers should fully inform the jury. Swift.

EXPLANATORY. adj. [from explain.] Con- taining explanation.

Had the printer given me notice, I would have printed the names, and writ explanatory notes.
Swift.

EXPLETIVE. n. f. [expletivum, Latin.] Some- thing used only to take up room; something of which the use is only to prevent a vacancy.

These are not only useful expletives to matter, but great ornaments of style. Swift.

Off the ear the open vowels tire,
While expletives their feeble aid do join. Pope.

Expletives, whether words or syllables, are made use of purely to supply a vacancy: do, before verbs plural, is absolutely such; and future tenses may explode did and does. Pope.

EXPLICABLE. adj. [from explicare.] Ex- plainable; possible to be explained.

Many difficulties, scarce explicable with any certainty, occur in the fabric of human nature.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Great variety there is in compound bodies,
and little many of them seem to be explicable.
Boyle.

To EXPLICATE. v. a. [explico, Lat.]

1. To unfold; to expand.

They explicate the leaves, and ripen food
For the silk labourers of the mulberry wood.
Blackmore.

2. To explain; to clear; to interpret.

They do not understand that part of christian philosophy which explicates the secret nature of this divine sacrament. Taylor.

Although the truths may be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The last verse of his last satire is not yet sufficiently explicated. Dryden.

EXPLICATION. n. f. [from explicare.]

1. The act of opening, unfolding, or ex- panding:

2. The act of explaining; interpretation; explanation.

The church preacheth, first publishing by way of testimony, the truth which from them she hath received, written in the sacred volumes of scripture; secondly, by way of explication, discovering the mysteries which lie hid therein.
Hooker.

Many things are needful for explication, and many for application unto particular occasions.
Hooker.

Allowances are made in the explication of our Saviour's parables, which hold only as to the main scope. Atterbury.

3. The sense given by an explainer; in- terpretation.

'Tis the substance of this theory I mainly depend upon; many single explications and particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

EXPLICATIVE. adj. [from explicare.] Hav- ing a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the subject of a complex proposition be either essential or any way necessary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the subject; as every mortal man is a son of Adam. Watts' Logic.

EXPLICATOR. n. f. [from explicare.] Ex- pounder; interpreter; explainer.

EXPLICIT. adj. [explicitus, Lat.] Un- folded; plain; clear; not obscure; not merely implied.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of censuring by the lump, and bring things close to explicit proof and evidence. Burnet.

These speculations, when most refined, serve only to shew how impossible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite.
South's Sermons.

EXPLICITLY. adv. [from explicit.] Plain- ly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querulous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's disposal; but where it is indulged, it usually is its own expositor, and explicitly avows it. Government of the Tongue.

To EXPLODE. v. a. [explodo, Latin.]

1. To drive out disgracefully with some noise of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect, but open disdain or scorn.

Him old and young
Exploded, and had seiz'd with violent hands,
Had not a cloud defending snatch'd him thence,
Unseen amid' the throng. Milton.

Thus was th' applause they meant,
Turn'd to exploding his, triumph to shame,
Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milton.

Old age explodes all but morality. Rymer.

There is pretended, that a magnetical globe or terrella, being placed upon its poles, would have a constant rotation; but this is commonly exploded, as being against all experience. Wilkins.

Shall that man pass for a proficient in Christ's school, who would have been exploded in the school of Zeno? South.

Provided that no word, which a society shall give a sanction to, be antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they shall find occasion for. Swift.

2. To drive out with noise and violence.

But late the kindled powder did explode
The maffy ball, and the brass tube unload.
Blackmore.

EXPLODER. n. f. [from explode.] A hiffer; one who drives out any person or thing with open contempt.

EXPLOIT. n. f. [exploitum, Latin, res exploita.] A design accomplished; an achievement; a successful attempt.

Know'it thou not any whom corrupting gold
Would tempt into a close exploit of death?

Shakespeare's Richard III.
Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will that no exploit have done.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.
How shall I relate

To human sense th' invisible exploits
Of warring spirits? Milton's Paradise Lost.
He breaks fierce Hannibal's insulting heats;
Of which exploit thus our friend Ennius treats.

Denham.
Will you thus dishonour
Your past exploits, and fully all your wars!

To EXPLOIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to achieve. Not used.

He exploited great matters in his own person in Gallia, and by his son in Spain. Camden.

To EXPLORATE. v. a. [exploro, Lat.] To search out; to try by searching; to explore.

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith explore their way. Brown.

EXPLORATION. n. f. [from explore.] Search; examination.

For exact exploration scales should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verticity. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Use may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles so many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORATOR. n. f. [from explore.] One who searches; a searcher; an exam- iner.

EXPLORATORY. adj. [from explore.] Search- ing; examining.

To EXPLORE. v. a. [exploro, Latin.] To try; to search into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that fight endur'd not, where he stood
Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds,
And thus his own undaunted heart explores. Milton.
Divers opinions I have been inclined to explain not only as a naturalist, but as a chymist, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philosophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire.
Boyle.

But Capys, and the rest of sounder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the wat'ry deep; at least to bore
The hollow sides, and hidden frauds explore.
Dryden's Æneid.

The mighty Stagyrite first left the shore,
Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore;
He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
Led by the light of the Mexican star. Pope.

EXPLOREMENT. n. f. [from explore.] Search; trial.

The frustrated search of Porta, upon the exploration of many, could scarce find one. Brown.

EXPLOSION. n. f. [from explode.] The act of driving out any thing with noise and violence.

Those parts which abound with strata of stone, or marble, making the strongest opposition, are the most furiously shattered; an event observable not only in this, but all other explosions whatever.
Woodward's Natural History.

In gunpowder the charcoal and sulphur easily take fire, and set fire to the nitre; and the spirit of the nitre being thereby rarified into vapour, rushes out with explosion, after the manner that the vapour of water rushes out of an æolipile: the sulphur also being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the explosion. Newton.

With explosion vast,
The thunder raises his tremendous voice. Thomson.

EXPLOSIVE. adj. [from explode.] Driv- ing out with noise and violence.

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power, renders the shock greater. Wheatward.

EXPONENT. n. f. [from expono, Lat.]

Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent: thus six is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in arithmetical progression, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents: and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms; for addition and subtraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

EXPONENTIAL. adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraick and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms, though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendental, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

TO EXPORT. v. a. [exporto, Latin.]

To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

Edward III. by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandise, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand. Addison.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and rubies. Arbutnot.

EXPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

EXPORTATION. n. f. [from export.] The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessities, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

EXPORTER. n. f. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each species be by the law bigger or less. Locke.

TO EXPOSE. v. a. [expono, expositum, Latin; exposer, French.]

1. To lay open; to make liable.

Take physick, Pompe;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And shew Heaven just. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Who here

Will carry whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunder's aim? Milton.

To pass the tiger period of his age,
Atting his part upon a crowded stage,
To lasting toils expos'd, and endless cares,
To open dangers, and to secret snares. Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But still he held his purpose to depart;
For as he lov'd her equal to his life,
He would not to the seas expose his wife. Dryd.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love;
Then fields the blades of bury'd corn disclose,
And while the balmy western spirit blows,
Earth to the breath her bosom dares expose.
Dryden's Virgil.

4. To lay open to censure or ridicule; to show in such a state as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, without arraigning their vices. Dryden.

Tully has justly exposed a precept, that a man should live with his friend, in such a manner that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him. Addison's Spectator.

A fool might once himself alone expose,
Now one in verse makes many more in prose. Pope.

Your fame and your property suffer alike, you are at once exposed and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test, and are pleased to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.

The exposing himself notoriously did change the fortune of the day, when his troops begun to give ground. Clarendon.

7. To cast out to chance.

A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man; and he again exposes him: a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.

Helpless and naked on a woman's knees,
To be expos'd or rear'd as the may please,
Feel her neglect, and pine for her disease. Prior.

8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault. Addison.

EXPOSITION. n. f. [from expose.]

1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.

Water he chutes clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn from springs with an expositional Arbutnot.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great irregularity as to the time of dining. Arbutnot.

2. Explanation; interpretation. [from expono, expono, Latin.]

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text. Shakespeare.

You are a worthy judge;
You know the law: your exposition
Hath been most found. Shakespeare.

I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me. Dryden.

EXPOSITOR. n. f. [expositor, Latin.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A mirth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales. Shaksp.

In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy, which is not consistent unto the authority of expositors. Brown's Hebrew Errors.

The sinner's conscience is the best expositor of the mind of God, under any judgment or affliction. South's Sermons.

Schoolasts, those copious expositors of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

TO EXPOSTULATE. v. n. [expostulo, Latin.] To canvas with another; to altercation; to debate without open rupture.

More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that for reverence of some alive
I give a sparing limit to my tongue. Shakespeare.

The emperor's ambassador did expostulate with the king, that he had broken his league with the emperor. Hayward.

It is madness for friendless and unarmed innocence to expostulate with invincible power. L'Estrange.

Durst I expostulate with providence, I then might ask. Cotton.

The bishop will expostulate, and the tenant will have regard to the reasonableness of the demand. Swift.

EXPOSTULATION. n. f. [from expostulate.]

1. Debate; altercation; discussion of an affair in private without rupture.

Expostulations end well between lovers, but ill between friends. Spectator.

2. Charge; accusation.

This makes her bleeding patients to accuse
High Heav'n, and these expostulations use;
Could nature then no private woman grace,
Whom we might dare to love with such a face? Walter.

Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, supposed not to have dealt singly or confidentially in the course of good friendship. Ayliffe's Parergon.

EXPOSTULATOR. n. f. [from expostulate.]

One that debates with another without open rupture.

EXPOSTULATORY. adj. [from expostulate.]

Containing expostulation.

This fable is a kind of an expostulatory debate between bounty and ingratitude. L'Estrange.

EXPOSURE. n. f. [from expose.]

1. The act of exposing or setting out to observation.

2. The state of being open to observation.

When we have our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet. Shakespeare.

3. The state of being exposed, or being liable to any thing.

Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts i' th' way before thee. Shakespeare.

4. The state of being in danger.

Ajax sets Theclites
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How hard soever rounded in with danger. Shak.

5. Exposition; the situation in which the sun or air is received.

The cold now advancing, set such plants as will not endure the house, in pots, two or three inches lower than the surface of some bed, under a southern exposure. Ex Evelyn.

TO EXPOUND. v. a. [expono, Latin.]

1. To explain; to clear; to interpret; to show the meaning of.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of those words than pope Leo himself expounded them, whose speech, concerning our Lord's ascension, may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker.

This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.
—And this way you have well expounded it. Shakespeare.

He expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself. Luke.

Those eight holy fathers, as in matters of faith they did not make truth, but religiously expounded it; so in matters of ecclesiastical government, they did not create provinces, but ordered the countries which they then had. Ralligh.

2. To examine; to lay open; a latinism.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch with rings and lockets. Hudibras.

EXPOUNDER. n. f. [from expound.] Explainer; interpreter.

This they did partly as faithful witnesses; making a mere relation of what God himself had revealed unto them; and partly as careful expounders, teachers, and persuaders thereof. Hooker.

The best he was

And faithfullest expounder of the laws. Dryden.

TO EXPRESS. v. a. [exprimo, expressus, Latin.]

1. To copy; to resemble; to represent.

So kids and whelps their fires and dains express,
And so the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden.
Adorn a dream, expressing human form,
The shape of him was fuller'd in the storm. Dryden.

2. To represent by any of the imitative arts; as poetry, sculpture, painting.

Each skillful artist shall express thy form
In animated gold. Smith's Placidia and Hippolitus.

3. To represent in words; to exhibit by language; to utter; to declare.

Less than half we find express,
Envy bid conceal the rest. Milton.

Though they have learned those sounds, yet there are no determined ideas laid up in their minds, which are to be expressed to others by them. Locke.

In moral ideas we have no sensible marks that resemble them, whereby we can set them down:
we have nothing but words to express them by.
Locke.

True wit is nature to advantage dress'd,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd. Pope.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for dress. Pope.
To shed tears, among the ancients, when they should express their gratitude to the gods with joy, was esteem'd a prophanation. Broomer.

4. To show or make known in any manner.

No longer shall the bodice aptly lace,
That air and shape of harmony express,
Fine by degrees, and delicately lets. Prior.

5. To utter; to declare: with the reciprocal pronoun.

Mr. Phillips did express himself with much indignation against me one evening. Pope.

6. To devote; to designate.

Moses and Aaron took their men repressed by their names. Numbers.

7. To squeeze out; to force out by compression.

Among the watry juices of fruit are all the fruits out of which drink is expressed; as the grape, and the apple. Baron.

8. To extort by violence, or elicit by art: a latinism.

Halters and racks cannot express from thee
More than thy deeds: 'tis only judgment waits thee. Ben Jonson.

Art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness
From dull privatives and lean emptiness. Donne.

EXPRESS. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Copied; resembling; exactly alike.

Of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love; his face Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.

2. Plain; apparent; declared in direct terms.

There hath been some doubt whether containing in scripture do import express setting down in plain terms; or else comprehending in such sort, that by reason we may from thence conclude all things which are necessary. Hooker.

There is not any positive law of men, whether general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in council; or by secret approbation;
but the same may be taken away, if occasion serves. Hooker.

All the gazers on the skies,
Read not in fair heav'n's story
Expresser truth, in truer glory,
Than they might in her bright eyes. Ben Jonson.

3. Clear; not dubious. This seems to be no proper use.

I love to feel myself of an express and settled judgment and affection, in things of the greatest moment. Moré's Divine Dialogues.

As to the testimonies of the fathers, let them be never so express against all sorts of prayers and invocations, they hold only of such a sort of prayer. Stillinger fleet.

Where reason or scripture is express for any opinion, or action, we may receive it as of divine authority. Locke.

4. On purpose; for a particular end.

They who are not induced to believe and live as they ought, by those discoveries which God hath made in scripture, would stand out against any evidence whatsoever; even that of a messenger sent express from the other world. Atterbury.

EXPRESS. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A messenger sent on purpose.

The king sent an express immediately to the marquis, with all the particular informations.
Clarendon.

As if expresser from all parts had come,
With fresh alarms threatening the fate of Rome.
Dryden's Juvenal.

Upon the first moment I was discovered, the emperor had early notice of it by an express.
Gulliver's Travels.

2. A message sent.

I am content my heart should be discovered to the world, without any of those popular captations which some men use in their speeches and expresses. King Charles.

3. A declaration in plain terms. Not usual.

They do not only contradict the general design and particular expresser of the gospel, but trespass against all logick and common sense. Norris.

EXPRESSIBLE. adj. [from express.]

1. That may be uttered or declared.

They had not only a memory and tradition of it in general, but even of several particular accidents of it likewise, which they handed downwards to the succeeding ages, with notes of the greatest terror expressible. Woodward.

2. That may be drawn by squeezing or expression.

EXPRESSION. n. f. [from express.]

1. The act or power of representing any thing.

There is nothing comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith a man alone is endowed, as with an instrument suitable to the excellency of his soul, for the communication of his thoughts. Holder on Speech.

2. The form or mode of language in which any thoughts are uttered.

But all expression sometimes give alloy
To noble thoughts, whose flame shall ne'er decay.
Buckingham.

The poet, to reconcile Helen to his reader, brings her in as a penitent, condemning her own infidelity in very strong expressions. Brown.

3. A phrase; a mode of speech.

4. The act of squeezing or forcing out any thing by a press.

Those juices that are so fleshy, as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink
by mixture of water. Bacon.

The juices of the leaves are obtained by expression: from this juice proceeds the taste.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EXPRESSIVE. adj. [from express.]

Having the power of utterance or representation. With of before the thing expressed.

Each verse so swells expressive of her woes,
And ev'ry tear in lines to mournful flows,
We, spite of fame, her fate revers'd believe, O'erlook her crimes, and think she ought to live! Tickel.

And four fair queens, whose hands sustain a flow'r,
Ta' expressive emblem of their foster pow'r.
Pope.

A visible and exemplary obedience to God's laws is the most expressive acknowledgment of the majesty and sovereignty of God, and disposes others to glorify him by the same observances.

Rogers.

EXPRESSIVELY. adv. [from expressive.]

In a clear and representative way.

EXPRESSIVENESS. n. f. [from expressive.]

The power of expression, or representation by words.

The murrain has all the expressiveness that words can give: it was here that Virgil drained lard to outdo Lucretius. Addison.

EXPRESSLY. adv. [from express.]

In direct terms; plainly; not by implication; not generally;

It doth not follow, that of necessity we shall sin, unless we expressly extend this in every particular. Hooker.

Articles of belief, and things which all men must do, to the end they may be saved, are either expressly set down in scripture, or else plainly thereby to be gathered. Hooker.

Who dare cross 'em,
Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly? Shakespeare.

The beginning of the worship of images in these western parts, was by the folly and superstition of the people, expressly against the will of their own bishop. Stillinger fleet.

This account I expressly give of them, when I enter on the argument. Atterbury.

All the duties that the best political laws enjoin, as conducive to the quiet and order of social life, are expressly commanded by our religion. Rogers.

EXPRESSURE. n. f. [from express. Now disused.]

1. Expression; utterance.

There is a mystery in the soul of state,
Which hath an operation more divine,
Than breath or pen can give expression to. Shaks.

2. The form; the likeness represented.

I will drop some obscure epistles of love;
wherein, by the colour of his beard, the manner of his gait, the expression of his eye, forehead,
and complexion, he shall find himself personated.
Shakspeare.

3. The mark; the impression.

And nightly, meadow fairies, look you sing,
Like to the gayer compass in a ring:
Ta' expression that it bears, green let it be,
More fertile fresh than all the field to see.
Shakspeare.

To EXPROBRATE. v. a. [exprobro, Lat.]

To charge upon with reproach;
to impute only with blame; to upbraid.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induces the providence of flocks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.

EXPROBRATION. n. f. [from exprobrate.]

Scornful charge; reproachful accusation; act of upbraiding.

The goodness we glory in, is to find out somewhat whereby we may judge others to be ungorily: each other's fault we observe as matter of exprobration, not of grief. Hooker.

The Partisans, with exprobration of Crassus's thirst after money, poured gold into his mouth
after he was dead. Abbar.

It will be a denial with scorn, with a taunting exprobration; and to be miserable without com-miseration, is the height of misery. South.

No need such boasts, or exprobrations false
Of cowardice: the military mould
The British files transcend in evil hour
For their proud foes. Philips.

To EXPROPRIATE. v. a. [ex and proprius, Latin.]

To make no longer
our own; to hold no longer as a property. Not in use.

When you have resigned, or rather assigned,
your expropriated will to God, and thereby entrusted him to will for you, all his dispensations towards you are, in effect, the acts of your own will.

Boyle's Seraphick Love.

To EXPUGN. v. a. [expugno, Latin.]

To conquer; to take by assault.

EXPUGNATION. n. f. [from expugno.]

To EXPUNGE. v. a. [expungo, Latin.]

1. To blot out; to rub out.

The difference of the denarius and drachm having been done in the manuscript, it was needless to expunge it. Arbuthnot.

Neither do they remember the many alterations, additions, and expungings made by great authors in those treatises which they prepare for the publick. Swift.

2. To efface; to annihilate.

Wilt thou not to a broken heart dispense
The balm of mercy, and expunge th' offence?
Sandys.

Deduct what is but vanity, or dross,
Or learning's luxury, or idleness,
Or tricks to shew the stretch of human brain
Mere curious pleasure, or ingenious pain;
Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrecent parts
Of all, our vices have created arts:
Then see how little the remaining sum,
Which serve the past, and must the times to come!

EXPURGATION. n. f. [expurgatio, Latin.]

1. The act of purging or cleansing.

All the intonches, but especially the great ones, kidneys and ureters, serve for expurgation. Wise's Surgery.

2. Purification from bad mixture, as of error or falsehood.

Wise men know, that arts and learning want expurgation; and if the course of truth be permitted to itself, it cannot escape many errors. Brown's Preface to Vulgar Errors.

EXPURGATOR. n. f. One who corrects by expunging.

They may well be allowed an expurgator.
Lord Digby.

EXPURGATORY. adj. [expurgatorius, Latin.] Employed in purging away what is noxious: as, the expurgatory index of the Romanists directs the abolition or expunction of passages admitted by any authors contrary to popery.

There wants expurgatory animadversions, whereby we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities; and having once a conceded list, we might with more safety attempt their reasons. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXQUISITE. adj. [exquisitus, Latin.]

1. Far-sought; excellent; consummate; complete.

His absolute exactness they imitate by tending unto that which is most exquisite in every particular. Hooker.

Why should the state be troubled with this needless charge of keeping and maintaining so great a navy in such exquisite perfection and readiness. Raleigh's Essays.

Adam and Eve, before the fall, were a different species; and none but a poet of the most unbounded invention, and the most exquisite judgment, could have fitted their conversation and behaviour to their state of innocence. Addis.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished by beasts in a more exquisite degree than they are by men; for they taste them sincere and pure, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Consummately bad.

With expulsive malice they have mixed the gall and vinegar of falsity and contempt. K. Charles.

3. Very sensibly felt.

The scales of the scarf-skin hinder objects from making too painful and exquisite impression on the nerves. Chyane.

EXQUISITELY. adv. [from exquisite.] Perfectly; completely: in either a good or ill sense.

We see more exquisitely with one eye shut than with both open; for that the spirits visual unite themselves, and become stronger. Bacon.

A collection of rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabic, and sought in the most remote parts by Epenius, the most excellent linguist. Wotton.

The soldier then, in Grecian arts unskill'd,
Returning rich with plunder from the field,
If cups of silver or of gold be brought,
With jewels set, and exquisitely wrought,
To glorious trappings straight the plate he turn'd,
And with the glit'ring spoil his horse adorn'd.

The poetry of operas is generally as exquisitely ill as the music is good. Addison on Italy.

EXQUISITENESS. n. f. [from exquisite.]

Nicety; perfection.

We suppose the superficies of the two glasses should be to exactly flat and smooth, that no air at all can come between them; and experience has informed us, that it is extremely difficult to procure from our ordinary tradesmen either glasses or marbles so much as approaching such an exquisiteness. Boyle.

EXSCRIPT. n. f. [exscriptum, Latin.] A copy; a writing copied from another.

EXSICCANT. adj. [from exsiccare.] Drying; having the power to dry up.

Some are moderately moist, and require to be treated with medicines of the like nature, such as fleshy parts; others dry in themselves, yet require exsicants, as bones. Wise's Anatomy.

To EXSICCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Lat.] To dry.

If in a dissolution of steel a separation of parts be made by precipitation, or exhalation, the exsiccated powder ascends not unto the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Great heats and droughts exsiccate and waste the moisture and vegetative nature of the earth. Mortimer's Husbandry.

EXSICCATION. n. f. [from exsiccare.] The act of drying.

That which is concreted by exsiccation, or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation; as earth, dirt, and clay. Brown.

That men should confer at very distant removes by an extemporary intercourse, is another reputed impossibility. Glanville.

They write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent interlinations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extemporary expletives. Swift.

EXTEMPORE. adv. [extempore, Lat.]

1. Without premeditation; suddenly; readily; without any previous care or preparation.

You may do it extempore; for it is but roaring. Shakespeare.

Nothing great ought to be ventured upon without preparation; but, above all, how foolish is it to engage extempore, where the concern is eternity? South's Sermons.

Hast thou no mark at which to bend thy bow?
Or, like a boy, pursue the carrion-crow
With pellets and with stones from tree to tree,
A fruitless toil, and liv'st extempore? Dryden.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective, but very improperly.

I have known a woman branch out into a long extempore dissertation upon a petticoat. Aldison.

EXTEMPORINITY. n. f. [from extempore.] The faculty of speaking or acting without premeditation; the state of being unpremeditated.

To EXTEMPORIZE. v. n. [from extempore.] To speak extempore, or without premeditation.

The extemporizing faculty is never more out of its element than in the pulpit; though even here, it is much more excusable in a sermon than in a prayer. South's Sermons.

To EXTEND. v. a. [extendo, Latin.]

1. To stretch out in any direction.

See the figure of his lifeless friend,
And his old sire, his helpless hand extend. Dryden's Virgil.

Should'ring God's altar a vile image stands,
Relics his features, and extends his hands. Pope.

2. To amplify: opposed to contract.

It is sufferable in any to use what liberty they list in their own manner of writing; but the contracting and extending the lines and sense of others would appear a thankless office. Watson.

3. To spread abroad; to diffuse; to expand.

He much magnifies the capacity of his understanding, who persuades himself that he can extend his thoughts further than God exists, or imagine any expansion where he is not. Locke.

4. To widen to a large comprehension.

Few extend their thoughts towards universal knowledge. Locke.

5. To stretch into assignable dimensions; to make local; to magnify so as to fill some assignable space.

The mind, say they, while you sustain
To hold her station in the brain;
You grant, at least she is extended,
Ergo the whole dispute is ended. Prior.

6. To enlarge; to continue.

To Helen's bed the gods alone assign Hermione 't' extend the regal line. Pope's Odyss.

7. To increase in force or duration.

If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion:
Feed and regard him not. Shakespeare's Mark.

The eyes of Tobit carrying in themselves some action of their own, were additionally promoted by that power which can extend their natures into production of effects, beyond created efficiencies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

8. To enlarge the comprehension of any position.

Seeing it is not set down how far the bounds of his speech concerning dissimilitude reach, who can assure us that it extended farther than to those things only wherein the nations were idolatrous? Hooker.

9. To impart; to communicate.

Let there be none to extend mercy unto him. Psalms.

10. To seize by course of law.

The law, that settles all you do,
And marries where you did but woo;
And if it judge upon your side,
Will soon extend her for your bride;
And put her person, goods or lands,
Or which you like best, int' your hands. Hudib.

To EXTEND. v. n. To reach to any distance.

My goodness extendeth not to thee. Psalms.
The bigness of such a church ought to be no greater than that unto which the voice of a preacher of a middling lungs can easily extend. Graunt.

EXTENDER. n. f. [from extend.] The person or instrument by which any thing is extended.

The extension made, the extenders are to be loosened gently. Wiseman.

EXTENDIBLE. adj. [from extend.]

1. Capable of extension; capable to be made wider or longer.

Tubes, recently made of fluids, are easily lengthened; such as have often suffered force, grow rigid, and hardly extendible. Arbuthnot.

2. That may be seized by law.

EXTENDLESSNESS. n. f. [from extend.]

Unlimited extension. In this sense it is once found; but, I think, with little propriety.

Certain molecular seminales must keep the world from an infinitude and extendlessness of excursions every moment into new figures and animals. Halle's Origin of Mankind.

EXTENSIBILITY. n. f. [from extendible.]

The quality of being extendible.

In what manner they are mixed, so as to give a fibre extensibility, who can say? Grew.

EXTENSIBLE. adj. [extensio, Latin.]

1. Capable of being stretched into length or breadth.

The malleus being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inward. Holder.

2. Capable of being extended to a larger comprehension.

That love is blind, is extensible beyond the object of poetry. Glanville.

EXTENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from extendible.] Capacity of being extended.

EXTENSION. n. f. [from extensio, Lat.]

1. The act of extending.

2. The state of being extended.

The hiccough cometh of fullness of meat, especially in children, which causeth an extension of the stomach. Bacon.

All rest satisfied at the postures of moderation, and none endure the extremity of flexure or extension. Brown.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters, or extension of it above the waters, doth agree to the antediluvian earth. Burnet.

By this idea of solidity is the extension of body distinguished from the extension of space: the extension of body being nothing but the cohesion or continuity of solid, separable, moveable parts; and the extension of space, the continuity of un-solid, inseparable, and immoveable parts. Locke.

EXTENSIONAL. adj. [from extension.]

Long drawn out; having great extent.

You ran into these extensional phantasms, which I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wriggings up and down of pismires. More's Divine Dialogues.

EXTENSIVE. adj. [extensus, Latin.]

1. Wide; large.

I would not be understood to recommend to all a pursuit of those sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns have advanced them. Watts on the Mind.

2. That may be extended. Not used.

Silver beaters chuse the finest coin, as that which is most extensive under the hammer. Boyle.

EXTENSIVELY. adv. [from extensive.]

Widely; largely.

'Tis impossible for any to pass a right judgement concerning them, without entering into most of these circumstances, and surveying them extensively, and comparing and balancing them all aight. Watts on the Mind.

EXTENSIVENESS. n. f. [from extensive.]

1. Largeness; diffusiveness; wideness.

As we have reason to admire the excellency of this contrivance, so have we to applaud the extensiveness of the benefit. Gov. of Tongue.

An extensiveness of understanding and a large memory are of service. Watts' Logick.

2. Possibility to be extended.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatibility or extensiveness of the throats and gullets of serpents: I myself have taken two entire adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray.

EXTENSOR. n. f. [Latin.] The muscle

by which any limb is extended.

Extensors are muscles so called, which serve to extend any part. Quincy.

Civil people had the flexors of the head very strong; but in the insolent there was a great overbalance of strength in the extensors of the neck. Arbuthnot and Pope's Macc. Scib.

EXTENT. participle from extend. Extended. Not used.

Both his hands most filthy secular,
Above the water were on high extent,
And fain'd to wash themselves incessantly. Spenser.

EXTENT. n. f. [extentus, Latin.]

1. Space or degree to which any thing is extended.

If I mean to reign
David's true heir, and his full sceptre sway
To just extent over all Israel's sons. Milton.

2. Bulk; size; compass.

The serpent, subtlest beast of all the field,
Of huge extent sometimes. Shelton.

- Ariana, of Darius' race,
That rul'd th' extent of Asia. Glover.
3. Communication; distribution.
An emperor of Rome,
Troubled, confronted thus, and for th' extent,
Of equal justice us'd with such contempt. Shaksp.
4. Execution; seizure.
Let my officers
Make an extent upon his house and land,
And turn him going. Shaksp. As you Like it.
- TO EXTENUATE. v. a. [extenuo, Latin.]
1. To lessen; to make small or slender in bulk.
His body behind his head becomes broad,
from whence it is again extenuated all the way to the tail. Grew's Museum.
2. To lessen; to diminish in any quality.
To perfit
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Shakspere.
But fortune there extenuates the crime;
What's vice in me, is only mirth in him. Dryd.
3. To lessen; to degrade; to diminish in honour.
Righteous are thy decrees on all thy works;
Who can extenuate thee? Milton's Parad. Lost.
4. To lessen in representation; to palliate: opposite to aggravate.
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me, as I am: nothing extenuate,
Nor set down ought in malice. Shakspere.
Upon his examination he denied little of that wherewith he was charged, nor endeavoured much to excuse or extenuate his fault; so that, not very wisely thinking to make his offence less by confession, he made it enough for condemnation.
Bacon.
Yet hear me, Sampson, not that I endeavour
To lessen or extenuate my offence. Milton.
5. To make lean.
6. To make rare: opposed to dense.
The race of all things here is to extenuate and turn things to be more pneumatical and rare, and not to retrograde from pneumatical to that which is dense. Bacon.
- EXTENUATION. n. f. [from extenuate.]
1. The act of representing things less ill than they are; contrary to aggravation; palliation.
2. Mitigation; alleviation of punishment.
When sin is to be judged, the kindest enquiry is what deeds of charity we can allege in extenuation of our punishment. Atterbury.
3. A loss of plumpness, or a general decay of the muscular flesh of the whole body.
A third sort of marasmus is an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat and dryness of the parts. Harvey.
- EXTERIOR. adj. [exterior, Latin.]
- Outward; external; not intrinsic.
And what is faith, love, virtue unessay'd Alone, without exterior help sustain'd. Milton.
Seraphick and common-lovers behold exterior beauties, as children and astronomers consider Galileo's optick glasses. Boyle.
Father, blacker, and mewier, are words which, together with the thing they denominate, imply also something else separate and exterior to the existence of that thing. Locke.
- EXTERIORLY. adv. [from exterior.] Outwardly; externally; not intrinsically.
You have slander'd nature in my form;
Which, howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fairer mind,
Than to be butcher of an innocent child. Shakspere.
- TO EXTERMINATE. v. a. [extermino, Latin.] To root out; to tear up; to drive away; to abolish; to destroy.

- Unlucky vices, on which the exterminating lot happened to fall. Decay of Piety.
Alexander left Grecian colonies in the Indies;
but they were exterminated by Sandrocottus.
Arbutnot on Coins.
- This discovery alone is sufficient, if the vices of men did not captivate their reason, to explode and exterminate rank atheism out of the world.
Bentley's Sermons.
- EXTERMINATION. n. f. [from exterminare.] Destruction; excision.
The question is, how far an holy war is to be pursued, whether to displanting and extermination of people? Bacon.
- EXTERMINATOR. n. f. [exterminator, Latin.]
The person or instrument by which any thing is destroyed.
- TO EXTERMINATE. v. a. [extermino, Latin.]
To exterminate; to destroy. Not used.
If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
Were both extermin'd. As you Like it.
- EXTERN. adj. [externus, Latin.]
1. External; outward; visible.
When my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at. Shakspere's Othello.
2. Without itself; not inherent; not intrinsic; not depending on itself.
When two bodies are pressed one against another, the rare body not being so able to resist division as the dense, and being not permitted to retire back, by reason of the extern violence impelling it, the parts of the rare body must be severed. Digby.
- EXTERNAL. adj. [externus, Latin.]
1. Outward; not proceeding from itself; operating or acting from without: opposite to internal.
We come to be assured that there is such a being, either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause, and which we cannot attribute to any other but such as we conceive God to be. Tillotson.
Shells being exposed loose upon the surface of the earth to the injuries of weather, to be trod upon by horses and other cattle, and to many other external accidents, are, in tract of time, broken to pieces. Woodward.
2. Having the outward appearance; having to the view or outward perception any particular nature.
Adam was then no less glorious in his externals:
he had a beautiful body as well as an immortal soul.
South.
He that commits only the external act of idolatry is as guilty as he that commits the external act of theft. Stillingfleet.
- EXTERNALLY. adv. [from external.] Outwardly.
The exterior ministry, externally and alone, hath in it nothing excellent, as being destitute of the sanctity that God requires, and it is common to wicked men and good. Taylor.
- TO EXTERIL. v. n. [ex and stillo, Latin.]
To drop or distil from.
- EXTILATION. n. f. [from ex and stillo, Latin.] The act of falling in drops.
They seem'd made by an exudation or extilation of putrifying juices out of the rocky earth.
Derham's Phys. Theology.
- TO EXTIMULATE. v. a. [extimulo, Latin.] To prick; to incite by stimulation.
Choler is one excretion whereby nature excludeth another, which, descending into the

- bowels, extimulates and excites them unto expulsion.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- EXTIMULATION. n. f. [from extimulatio, Lat.] Pungency; power of exciting motion or sensation.
The native spirits admit great diversity; as,
hot, cold, active, dull, &c. whence proceed most of the virtues of bodies; but the air intermixed is without virtues, and maketh things insipid, and without any extimulation. Bacon.
- EXTINCT. adj. [extinctus, Latin.]
1. Extinguished; quenched; put out.
They are extinct, quenched as tow. Isaiah.
Their purple vengeance bath'd in gore retired,
Her weapons blunted, and extinct her fires. Pope.
2. At a stop; without progressive succession.
My days are extinct. Job.
The royal family is all extinct,
And she who reigns bestows her crown on me. Dryden.
The nobility are never likely to be extinct, because the greatest part of their titles descend to heirs general. Swift.
3. Abolished; out of force.
A censure inflicted a jure continues, though such law be extinct, or the lawgiver removed from his office. Ayliffe.
- EXTINCTION. n. f. [extinctio, Latin.]
1. The act of quenching or extinguishing.
Red-hot needles or wires, extinguished in quicksilver, do yet acquire a verticity according to the laws of position and extinction. Brown.
2. The state of being quenched.
The parts are consumed through extinction of their native heat, and dissipation of their radical moisture. Harvey.
3. Destruction; excision.
The extinction of nations, and the desolation of kingdoms, were but the effects of this destructive evil. Rogers' Sermons.
4. Suppression.
They lie in dead oblivion, losing half
The fleeting moments of too short a life,
Total extinction of th' enlighten'd soul. Thomson.
- TO EXTINGUISH. v. a. [extinguo, Latin.]
1. To put out; to quench.
The soft god of pleasure that warm'd our desires,
Has broken his bow, and extinguish'd his fires. Dryden.
Then rose the seed of chaos and of night,
To blot out order, and extinguish'd light. Pope.
2. To suppress; to destroy.
They extinguish the love of the people to the young king, by remembering some imperfections of his father. Hayward.
My fame of chastity, by which the skies
I reacht before, by thee extinguish'd dies. Denham.
3. To cloud; to obscure.
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount,
Her nat'ral graces that extinguish art. Shakspere.
- EXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [from extinguish.] That may be quenched, suppressed, or destroyed.
- EXTINGUISHER. n. f. [from extinguish.]
A hollow cone put upon a candle to quench it.
If it should ever offer to flame out again, I would use the conicum as an extinguisher to smother it. More's Divine Dialogues.
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames. Dryden.
'Tis better to cover the vital flame with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it burns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket. Callier on the Palace of Life.
- EXTINGUISHMENT. n. f. [from extinguish.]

EXT

1. Extinction; suppression; act of quenching; destruction.
When death's form appears, the seareth not
An utter quenching, or extinguishment;
She would be glad to meet with such a lot,
That to the might all future ill prevent.
Davies
He moved him to a war upon Flanders, for the better extinguishment of the civil wars of France.
Bacon
The immediate cause of death is the resolution or extinguishment of the spirits.
Bacon
 2. Abolition; nullification.
Divine laws of christian church polity may not be altered by extinguishment.
Hooker
 3. Termination of a family or succession.
His heart easily conceived treason against the crown, wherein he perished himself, and made a final extinguishment of his house and honour.
Davies on Ireland
- To EXTIRP. v. a. [extirpo, Latin.] To eradicate; to root out. Not used.
Which to extirp he laid him privily Down in a darksome lowly place far in.
Nor shall that nation boast it so with us,
But be extirped from our provinces.
Shaksp.
- To EXTIRPATE. v. a. [extirpo, Lat.]
To root out; to eradicate; to excise;
to destroy.
The rebels were grown so strong, that they made account speedily to extirpate the British nation in that kingdom.
Dryden
We in vain endeavour to drive the wolf from our own to another's door; the breed ought to be extirpated out of the island.
Locke
It is not the business of virtue to extirpate the affections, but to regulate them.
Addison
- EXTIRPATION. n. f. [from extirpare.]
The act of rooting out; eradication;
excision; destruction.
It is said that popery, for want of utter extirpation, hath in some places taken root and flourished again.
Hooker
Religion requires the extirpation of all those passions and vices which render men unfriendly and troublesome to one another.
Tillotson
- EXTIRPATOR. n. f. [from extirpare.]
One who roots out; a destroyer.
- EXTISPICIOUS. adj. [extispicius, Lat.] Augural; relating to the inspection of entrails in order to prognostication.
Thus hath he deluded many nations unto his augural and extispicius inventions, from casual and uncontrived contingencies, divining events succeeding.
Brown's Vulgar Errors
- To EXTOL. v. a. [extollo, Latin.] To praise; to magnify; to laud; to celebrate.
Exalt him that rideth upon the heavens.
Psalms
When a rich man speaketh, every man holdeth his tongue; and look, what he saith they exalt it to the clouds.
Ecclisiasiticus
Heaven and earth shall high extol
Thy praises with th' innumerable sound Of hymns, and sacred songs, wherewith thy throne
Encompass'd shall resound thee ever blest'd.
Milton
Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her cinnamon and sweet anisum boast.
Dryd.
- EXTOLLER. n. f. [from extol.] A praiser;
a magnifier; one that praises to the tus*, Latin.]

1. To draw by force; to force away; to wrest; to wring from one.
'Till the injurious Romans did extort
This tribute from us, we were free. Shakspere
That glory never shall his wrath or might Extort from me, to bow and sue for grace
With suppliant knee, and deify his pow'r.
Milton's Paradise Lost
I remember well the impious oath,
Hardly extorted from my trembling youth.
Rowe
My earnest desires, not any doubts of your goodness, but my real concern for your welfare, extort this from me.
Wake
 2. To gain by violence or oppression.
His tail was stretch'd out in wood'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it taught,
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought.
Spenser
Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold?
Shakspere's Henry vi.
- To EXTORT. v. n. To practise oppression and violence. Disused.
To whom they never gave any penny of entertainment, but let them feed upon the countries, and extort upon all men where they come.
S. enser on Ireland
Before they did extort and oppress the people only by colour of a lewd custom, they did afterwards use the same extortions by warrant.
Davies on Ireland
- EXTORTER. n. f. [from extort.] One who practises oppression or extortion.
- EXTORTION. n. f. [from extort.]
1. The act or practice of gaining by violence and rapacity.
That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion.
Shakspere's Henry viii.
Oppression and extortion did maintain the greatness, and oppression and extortion did extinguish the greatness of that house.
Davies
2. Force by which any thing is unjustly taken away.
Because the lords had power to impose this charge, the freeholders were glad to give a great part of their lands to hold the rest free from that extortion.
Davies on Ireland
A succeeding king's just recovery of rights from unjust usurpations and extortions, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. King Charles
- EXTORTIONER. n. f. [from extortion.]
One who practises extortion; one who grows rich by violence and rapacity.
There will be always murderers, adulterers, extortioners, church-robbers, traitors, and other rabblerment.
Camden
The covetous extortioner is involved in the same sentence.
Decay of Piety
- To EXTRACTION. v. a. [extraho, extractum, Latin.]

fallhoods.
Swift
- EXTRACT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The substance extracted; the chief parts drawn from any thing.
In tinctures, if the superfluous spirit of wine be distilled off, it leaves at the bottom that thicker substance, which chemists call the extract of the vegetables.
Boyle
To dip our tongues in gall, to have nothing in our mouth but the extract and exhalation of our inward bitterness, is no great sensuality.
Government of the Tongue
 2. The chief heads drawn from a book;
an abstract; an epitome.
I will present a few extracts out of authors.
Camden's Remains
Some books may be read by extracts made of them by others, but only in the less important arguments, and the meaner books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters, starchy things.
Bacon's Essays
Spend some hours every day in reading, and making extracts, if your memory be weak.
Swift
 3. Extraction; descent. Not used.
The apostle gives it a value suitable to its extract, branding it with the most ignominious imputation of foolishness.
Saunders
- EXTRACTION. n. f. [extractio, Latin.]
1. The act of drawing one part out of a compound; the act of drawing out the principal substance by chymical operation.
Although the charge of extraction should exceed the worth, at least it will discover nature and possibility.
Bacon
The distillations of waters, extractions of oils, and such like experiments, are unknown to the ancients.
Huterwill
It would not defray the charge and labour of the extraction, and must needs be all irretrievably lost.
Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 2. Derivation from an original; lineage;
descent.
One whose extraction 's from an ancient line,
Gives hope again that well-born men may shine;
The meanest in your nature mild and good,
The noble rest secured in your blood.

EXTRAORDINARY. adj. [extraordinarius, Latin.] This word and its derivatives are generally pronounced extraordinary, whereby the a is liquified into the o.]

3. Different from common order and method; not ordinary.

Evils must be judged inevitable, if there be no apparent ordinary way to avoid them; because where council and advice bear rule of God's extraordinary power, without extraordinary warrant, we cannot presume. Hooker.

Spain had no wars save those which were grown into an ordinary: now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Voltaine and the Palatinate. Bacon.

See what extraordinary armies have been transmitted thither, and what ordinary forces maintained there. Davies.

2. Different from the common course of law.

If they proceeded in a martial or any other extraordinary way, without any form of law, his majesty should declare his justice and affection to an old faithful servant. Clarendon.

3. Eminent; remarkable; more than common.

The house was built of fair and strong stone, not affecting so much any extraordinary kind of fineness, as an honourable representing of a firm stateliness. Sidney.

The Indians worshipped rivers, fountains, rocks, or great stones, and all things which seemed to have something extraordinary in them. Stillingfleet.

EXTRAORDINARY. adv. [This word seems only a colloquial barbarism, used for the ease of pronunciation.] Extraordinarily.

I ran over their cabinet of medals, but don't remember to have met with any things in it that are extraordinary rare. Addison.

EXTRAPAROCHIAL. adj. [extra and parochia, Latin.] Not comprehended within any parish.

EXTRAPROVINCIAL. adj. [extra and provincia, Latin.] Not within the same province; not within the jurisdiction of the same archbishop.

An extraprovincial citation is not valid, ultra duas diastas, above two days journey; nor is a citation valid that contains many conditions manifestly inconvenient. Ayliffe's Parergon.

EXTRAREGULAR. adj. [extra and regula, Latin.] Not comprehended within a rule.

His providence is extraregular, and produces strange things beyond common rules; and he led Israel through a sea, and made a rock pour forth water. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

EXTRA'VAGANCE. } n. f. [extravagans, EXTRA'VAGANCY. } Latin.]

1. Excursion or sally beyond prescribed limits.

I have troubled you too far with this extravagance: I shall make no delay to recall myself into the road again. Hammond.

2. Irregularity; wildness.

3. Outrage; violence; outrageous vehemence.

How many, by the wild fury and extravagancy of their own passions, have put their bodies into a combustion, and by stirring up their rage against others, have armed that fierce humour against themselves. Tillotson.

4. Unnatural tumour; bombast.

Some verses of my own, Maximin and Almanzor, cry vengeance upon me for their extravagance. Dryden.

5. Waste; vain and superfluous expence.

She was so expensive, that the income of three dukes was not enough to supply her extravagance. Arbuthnot.

EXTRA'VAGANT. adj. [extravagans, Latin.]

1. Wandering out of his bounds. This is the primogential sense, but not now in use.

At his warning
The extravagant and erring spirit hies
To his confine. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

2. Roving beyond just limits or prescribed methods.

I dare not ask for what you would not grant: But wishes, madam, are extravagant; They are not bounded with things possible; I may with more than I presume to tell. Dryd.

3. Not comprehended in any thing.
Twenty constitutions of pope John xxi. are called the extravagants; for that they being written in no order or method, vagantur extra corpus collectionum canonum. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. Irregular; wild.

For a dance they seem'd
Somewhat extravagant, and wild. Milton.

There appears something nobly wild and extravagant in great natural geniuses, infinitely more beautiful than turn and polishing. Addison.

New ideas employed my fancy all night, and composed a wild extravagant dream. Addison.

5. Wasteful; prodigal; vainly expensive.

An extravagant man, who has nothing else to recommend him but a false generosity, is often more beloved than a person of a much more finished character, who is defective in this particular. Addison.

EXTRA'VAGANT. n. f. One who is confined in no general rule or definition.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants. Glanville.

There are certain extravagants among people of all sizes and professions. L'Estrange.

EXTRA'VAGANTLY. adv. [from extravagant.]

1. In an extravagant manner; wildly.

Her passion was extravagantly new; But mine is much the madder of the two. Dryd.

2. In an unreasonable degree.

Some are found to praise our author, and others as rashly and extravagantly contradicted his admirers. Pope.

3. Expensively; luxuriously; wastefully; profusely.

EXTRA'VAGANTNESS. n. f. [from extravagant.] Excess; excursion beyond limits.

To EXTRA'VAGATE. v. n. [extra and vagor, Latin.] To wander out of limits. DiD.

EXTRA'VASATED. adj. [extra and vasa, Latin.] Forced out of the properly containing vessels.

The viscous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleuristick people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat. Arbuthnot.

EXTRA'VASATION. n. f. [from extravasated.] The act of forcing, or state of being forced, out of the proper containing vessels.

Ailment, too viscous, obstructing the glands, and by its acrimony corroding the small vessels of the lungs, after a rupture and extravasation of blood, easily produces an ulcer. Arbuthnot.

EXTRA'VATE. adj. [extra and vena, Lat.] Let out of the veins.

That there is a magnetic way of curing wounds, by anointing the weapon; and that the wound is affected in like manner as is the extravate blood by the sympathetick medicine, as to matter of fact, is with circumstances of good evidence asserted. Glanville's Scripps.

EXTRA'VESION. n. f. [extra and versio, Latin.] The act of throwing out; the state of being thrown out.

Nor does there intervene heat to afford them any colour to pretend that there is made an extraversion of the sulphur, or of any of the two other supposed principles. Boyle.

EXTRA'UGHT. part. [This is an obsolete participle from extra; as disfrught from disfract.] Extracted.

Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art extraught,
To let thy tongue detect thy baseborn heart?

Shakspeare's Henry vi.

EXTREME. adj. [extremus, Lat.] This word is sometimes corrupted by the superlative termination, of which it is by no means capable, as it has in itself the superlative signification.]

1. Greatest; of the highest degree.

The Lord shall smite thee with a fever, an inflammation, and an extreme burning. Dru.

They thought it the extremest of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and disorderly people. Bacon.

2. Utmost.

The hairy soul
Stood on th' extremest verge of the swift brook, Augmenting it with tears. Shakespeare.

Mileno's cape and Buili last he view'd,
That on the sea's extremest borders stood. Addis.

3. Last; that beyond which there is nothing.

Farewel, ungrateful and unkind! I go,
Condemn'd by thee, to those sad shades below:
I go th' extremest remedy to prove,
To drink oblivion, and to drench my love. Dryd.

4. Pressing in the utmost degree.

Cases of necessity being sometime but urgent, sometime extreme, the consideration of publick utility is urged equivalent to the easier kind of necessity. Hunter.

5. Rigorous; strict.

If thou be extreme to mark what is amiss, O
Lord, who shall abide it? Psalms.

EXTRA. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.

Thither by harpy footed furies hall'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce;
From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine Irremovable, inha'd, and frozen round
Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire. Milton.

Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of such
Who still are pleas'd too little, or too much. Pope.

They cannot bear that human nature, which they know to be imperfect, should be raised in an extreme, without opposition. Pope.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other; extremity.

The true protestant religion is situated in the golden mean; the enemies unto her are the ex- trêmes on either hand. Bacon.

The syllogistical form only shews, that if the intermediate idea agrees with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, then those two remote ones, or, as they are called, extrêmes, du-certainly agree. Locke.

EXTREMELY. adv. [from extreme.]

1. In the utmost degree.

She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice; but so suppressed with a kind of whispering note, that he could not conceive the words distinctly. Sidney.

2. Very much; greatly: in familiar language.

Whoever fees a scoundrel in a gown reeling home at midnight, is apt to be extremely comforted in his own vices. Swift.

EXTREMITY. n. f. [extremus, Latin.]

1. The utmost point; the highest degree.

He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in extremity of cold, shall undoubtedly remove the disease; but together with it the diseased too. Hooker.

Should any one be cruel and uncharitable to that extremity, yet this would not prove that propiety gave any authority. Locke.

2. The utmost parts; the parts most remote from the middle.

In its proper colour it is inclining to white, excepting the extremities or tops of the wing feathers, which are black. Brown.

The extremities of the joints must be seldom hidden, and the extremities or end of the feet never. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities; but such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper. Abraham on Diet.

3. The points in the utmost degree of opposition, or at the utmost distance from each other.

He's a man of that strange composition
pt. of mind all the worst extremities
Of passion and rage. Lucan's Sisyphus.

4. Remotest parts; parts at the greatest distance.

They sent fleets out of the Red Sea to the extremities of Ethiopia, and imported quantities of precious goods. Arabian.

5. Violence of passion.

With equal measure she did moderate
The strong extremities of their outrage. Spenser.
If I threw no colour for my extremity, let me be your tableport. Shakespeare.

6. The utmost violence, rigour, or distress.

Why should not the same laws take good effect on that people, being prepared by the sword, and brought under by extremity? Spenser.

Their hearts the guesseth,
And yields her to extremity of time. Fairy Qu.

He promised, if they should be besieged, to relieve them before they should be reduced to extremity. Clarendon.

It should be never so exposed to the extremity of war as to fall into those barbarous hands. Clarendon.

I wish peace, and any terms prefer,
Before the last extremities of war. Dryden.

7. The most aggravated state.

The world is running mad after force, the extremity of bad poetry; or rather the judgment that is fallen upon dramatic writing. Dryden.

TO EXTRICATE. v. a. [extrico, Lat.]

To disembarass; to set free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.

We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.

These are reliefs to nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs of her vessels. Addison.

EXTRICATION. n. f. [from extricate.]

The act of disentangling; disentanglement.

Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as predominates in brine; and it does not appear, that this acid spirit did as such pre-exist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been made rather by trans-mutation than extrication. Boyle.

EXTRINSICAL. adj. [extrinsecus, Lat.]

External; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsic. It is commonly written so, but analogy requires extrin- secal.

A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsecal agent: absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself. Digby on Bodies.

Neither is the atom by any extrinsecal impulse diverted from its natural course. Ray.

Outward objects, that are extrinsecal to the mind; and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsic, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke.

EXTRINSICALLY. adv. [from extrinsecal.]

From without.

If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsecally advenient, be an error, almost all the world hath been mistaken. Glavin.

EXTRINSICK. adj. [extrinsecus, Latin.]

Outward; external.

When they cannot shake the main fort, they try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise false prejudice against his most extrinsecal adherents. Gow. of the Tongue.

Extrinsecal nodes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself;
but it is a manner of being which some substances attain, by reason of something external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated. Moss's Logic.

TO EXTRUCT. v. a. [extruo, extructum, Latin.] To build; to raise; to form into a structure.

EXTRUCTOR. n. f. [from extruct.] A

TO EXTRUDE. v. a. [extrudo, Latin.]

To thrust off; to drive off; to push out with violence.

If in any part of the continent they found the shells, they concluded that the sea had been extruded and driven off by the mud. Woodward.

EXTRUSION. n. f. [extrusio, Latin.] The act of thrusting or driving out.

They suppose the channel of the sea formed, and mountains and caverns, by a violent depression of some parts of the earth, and an extrusio and elevation of others. Burnet.

EXUBERANCE. n. f. [ex anduber, Lat.]

Knobs, or parts protuberant; parts that rise from the rest of the body.

The gouge takes off the irregularities or exu- berances that lie farthest from the axis of the work. Maxon's Mechanical Exercises.

EXUBERANCE. n. f. [exuberatio, Latin.]

Overgrowth; superfluous shoots; useless abundance; luxuriance.

Men esteem the overflowing of gall the exu- berance of zeal, and all the promises of the faithful combatant they confidently appropriate. Decay of Piety.

Though he expatiates on the same thoughts in different words, yet in his similes that exuberance is avoided. Garrick.

EXUBERANT. adj. [exuberans, Latin.]

1. Growing with superfluous shoots; over-abundant; superfluously plenteous; luxuriant.

Another Flora there of holder hues,
Plays o'er the fields, and showers with sudden hand Exuberant spring. Thompson's Spring.

His similes have been thought too exuberant, and full of circumstances. Pope.

2. Abounding in the utmost degree.

Such immense power, such unsearchable wisdom, and such exuberant goodness, as may justly ravail us to an amazement, rather than a bare admiration. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

A part of that exuberant devotion, with which the whole assembly raised and animated one another, catches a reader at the greatest distance of time. Andison's Freeholder.

EXUBERANTLY. adv. [from exuberant.]

Abundantly; to a superfluous degree.

A considerable quantity of the vegetable matter lay at the surface of the antediluvian earth, and rendered it exuberantly fruitful. Woodward.

TO EXUBERATE. v. n. [exubero, Latin.]

To abound in the highest degree.

All the loveliness imparted to the creature is lent it, to give us enlarged conceptions of that vast confluence and immensity that exuberates in God. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

EXUCCOUS. adj. [exsuccus, Latin.] Without juice; dry.

This is to be effected not only in the plant yet growing, but in that which is brought exuccous and dry unto us. Brown.

EXUDATION. n. f. [from exudo, Latin.]

1. The act of emitting in sweat; the act of emitting moisture through the pores.

The tumour sometimes arises by a general exudation out of the cutis. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. The matter issuing out by sweat from any body.

The gum of trees, shining and clear, is but a straining of the juice of the tree through the wood and bark; and Cornish diamonds, and rock ru-bies, which are yet more replendent than gums, are the fine exudations of stone. Bacon.

If it hath more dew at noon than in the morning, then it seemeth to be an exudation of the herb itself. Bacon.

Cuckowspittle, or woodfere, that spumous frothy dew, or exudation, or both, is found especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To EXU'DATE. } v. n. [exudo, Lat.] To
To EXU'DE. } sweat out; to issue out by sweat.

Some perforations in the part itself, through which the humour included doth exudate, may be observed in such as are fresh. Brown.

The juices of the flowers are, first, the expected juice; secondly, a volatile oil, wherein the smell of the plant presides; thirdly, honey, exuding from all flowers, the bitter not excepted. Arbuthnot.

To EXU'DATE. } v. a. To force out, or
To EXU'DE. } throw out, as by sweat.
To EXULCERATE. v. a. [exulcero,
Latin.]

1. To make sore with an ulcer; to affect with a running or eating sore.

Cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and exulcerate it, if they stay on long. Bacon.

That the saliva hath a virtue of macerating bodies, appears by the effects in taking away warts, sometimes exulcerating the jaws, and rotting the teeth. Ray on the Creation.

The stagnating serum turning acrimonious, exulcerates and putrifies the bowels. Arbuthnot.

2. To afflict; to corrode; to enrage.
Thoughts, my tormentors, arm'd with deadly stings,

Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise Dive inflammation, which no cooling herb
Or medicinal liquor can alluage. Milton.

EXULCERATION. n. f. [from exulcerate.]

1. The beginning erosion, which wears away the substance and forms an ulcer. Quincy.

2. Exacerbation; corrosion.
This exulceration of mind made him apt to take all occasions of contradiction. Hosier.

EXULCERATORY. adj. [from exulcerate.]
Having a tendency to cause ulcers.

To EXULT. v. n. [exulto, Latin.] To rejoice above measure; to triumph; to be in high exaltation of gladness.

The whole world did seem to exult that it had occasion of pouring out gifts to so blessed a purpose. Hooker.

Who might be your mother,
That you insult, exult, and rail, at once
Over the wretched? Shakespeare's As you like it

EXULTANCE. n. f. [from exult.] Transport; joy; triumph; gladness; exultation.

We have great cause of exultance and joy, God's service being the most perfect freedom. Government of the Tongue.

EXULTATION. n. f. [exultatio, Latin.] Joy; triumph; rapturous delight.

Good effects may grow in each of the people towards other, in them all towards their pastor, and in their pastor towards every of them; between whom there daily and interchangeably pass, in the hearing of God himself, and in the presence of his holy angels, so many heavenly acclamations, exultations, provocations, petitions. Hooker.

Devotion inspires men with sentiments of religious gratitude, and swells their hearts with inward transports of joy and exultation. Addison.

To EXUNDATE. v. n. [exundo Lat.] To overflow. DiB.

1. The organ of vision; the medium of the sense of sight.

Good sir John, as you have one eye upon my solemnity, turn another into the register of your own, that I may pass with a reproof on the easier. Shak.

Vouchsafe, bright moon, and these thy stars to shine,

Those clouds remov'd, upon our watry eyne. Shakespeare.

Not doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself,
Not going from itself; but eyes opposed,
Salute each other with each other's form. Shak.

He kept him as the apple of his eye. Deut.

As long looking against the sun or fire hurteth the eye by dilatation; so curious printing in small volumes, and reading of small letters, do hurt the eye by contraction. Bacon.

His awful pretence did the crowd surprise,
Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;
Free that count'ld him born for kingly ways,
So fierce, they dash'd intolerable day. Dryden.

But sure the eye of time beholds no name
So hieft as thine in all the rolls of fame. Pope.

2. Sight; ocular knowledge.
Who hath bewitened you, that you should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth? Gal.

Modest as morning, when the coldly eyes
The youthful Phoebus. Shakespeare.

Bold deed thou hast presum'd, advent'rous Eve,
And perit great provok'd, who thus hath dar'd,
Had it been only coveting to eye
That sacred fruit. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Such a story as the basilisk is that of the wolf, concerning priority of vision, that a man becomes hoarse and dumb, if the wolf have the advantage first to eye him. Brown.

It was needful for the hare perpetually to eye her pursuing enemy. Moore.

Then gave it to his faithful squire,
With lessons how to observe and eye her. Hudibras.

Eye nature's walks, shoot folly as it flies,
And catch the manners living as they rise. Pope.
Have a box when eunuchs sing,
And foremost in the circle eye a king. Pope.

To EYE. v. n. To appear; to show; to bear an appearance. Not used.

Forgive me,
Since my becoming kills me when they do not Eye well to you. Shakespeare.

EYEBALL. n. f. [eye and ball.] The apple of the eye; the pupil.

Be subject to no sight but mine: invisible
To every eyeball else. Shakespeare.

I feel my hair grow stiff, my eyeballs rowl;
This is the only form could shake my soul. Dry.

Not when a gilt buffet's reflected pride
Turns you from sound philosophy aside,
Nor when from plate to plate your eyeballs roll,
And the brain dances to the mantling bowl. Pope.

EYEBRIGHT. n. f. [euphrasia, Latin.] A plant, called by Milton euphrasy.

EYEBROW. n. f. [eye and brow.] The hairy arch over the eye.

The lover,
Sighing like a furnace; with a woful ballad
Made to his mistress' eyebrow. Shakespeare.

On the seventh day he shall shave all his hair off his head, his beard, and his eyebrows. Lev.

Above stand the eyebrows, to keep any thing from running down upon the eyes; as drops of sweat from the forehead, or dust. Ray.

The balls of his broad eyes roll'd in his head,
And glar'd betwixt a yellow and a red;
He look'd a lion with a gloomy glare,
And o'er his eyebrows hung his matted hair. Dryden.

EYED. adj. [from eye.] Having eyes: used in composition.

Some reliques of the true antiquity,
Though disfigured, a well-eyed man
May happily discover. Spenser.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakespeare.

EYEDROP. n. f. [eye and drop.] Tear.

That tyranny which never quaffs but blood,
Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife
With gentle eyedrops. Shakespeare.

EYEGLANCE. n. f. [eye and glance.] Quick notice of the eye.

His countenance was bold, and bashed not For Guyon's looks; but scornful eyeglance at him shot. Fairy Queen.

EYEGLASS. n. f. [eye and glass.] Spectacles; glass to assist the sight.

Ha! you not seen Camillo?
But that's past doubt you have; or your eyeglass
Is thicker than a cuckold's horn. Shakespeare.

By comparing it with a good perspective of four foot in length, made with a concave eyeglass, I could read at a greater distance with my own instrument than with the glass. Newton.

EYELASH. n. f. [eye and lash.] The line of hair that edges the eyelid.

EYELASS. adj. [from eye.] Wanting eyes; sightless; deprived of sight.

A proclaim'd prize! most happy!
That eyelass head of thine was first from'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Shakespeare.

Promise was, that I Should Israel from Philistian yoke deliver:
Ask for this great deliverer now, and find him
Eyelass in Gaza, at the mill with slaves. Milton.

Pentheus durst deride
The cheated people, and the eyelass guide. Addis.

Meonides,
Poor eyelass pilgrim. Phillips.

Cyclop, if any pitying thy disgrace,
Ask who disfigur'd thus that eyelass face. Pope.

EYELET. n. f. [ailet, French, a little eye.] A hole through which light may enter; any small perforation for a lace to go through.

Sitting the back and fingers of a glove, I made eyelet holes to draw it close. Wife of Man.

EYELID. n. f. [eye and lid.] The membrane that shuts over the eye.

Mark when the smiles with amiable cheer,
And tell me whereto can ye liken it!
When on each eyelid sweetly do appear
An hundred graces as in shade to sit. Spenser.

On my eyelids is the shadow of death.
Fetch me that flower; the herb I shew'd thee once; Job.

The juice of it, on sleeping eyelids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly doat
Upon the next live creature that it sees. Shaks.

The Turks have a black powder, made of a mineral called alcohol, which with a fine long pencil they lay under their eyelids, which doth colour black, whereby the white of the eye is set off more white. Bacon.

At length, the crackling noise and dreadful blaze
Call'd up some waking lover to the fight;
And long it was ere he the rest could raise,
Whose heavy eyelids yet were full of night. Dryden.

EYESERVANT. n. f. [eye and servant.] A servant that works only while watched.

EYESERVICE. n. f. [eye and service.] Service performed only under inspection.

Servants obey in all things your masters; not with eyeservice as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart. Cal.

EYESHOT. n. f. [eye and shot.] Sight; glance; view.

I must not think of sharing the booty before I am free from danger, and out of eyeshot from the other windows. Dryden.

I have preserved many a young man from her eyeshot by this means. Spectator.

EYESIGHT. n. f. [eye and sight.] Sight of the eye.

The Lord hath recompensed me according to my cleanness in his eyesight. 2 Sam.

Metinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb;
Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale. Shakespeare.

Though sight be lost,
Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,
At home in leisure and domestic ease,
Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eyesight exposes daily men abroad. Milton.

Josephus sets this down from his own eyesight, being himself a chief captain at the siege of Jopata, where these events happened. Wilkins' Math. Magick.

He blinds the wife, gives eyesight to the blind,
And molds and stamps anew the lover's mind. Dryden.

EYESORE. n. f. [eye and sore.] Something offensive to the sight.

Hadst the church of Christ, from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always tied itself to end neither sermon, nor almost any speech of moment, which hath concerned matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity, which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of psalms become now, at length, an eyesore, or a galling to the ears that hear it? Hooker.

EYESORE. n. f. [eye and sore.] Something offensive to the sight.

Hadst the church of Christ, from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always tied itself to end neither sermon, nor almost any speech of moment, which hath concerned matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity,
which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of psalms become now, at length, an eyesore, or a galling to the ears that hear it? Hooker.

Ey, doff this habit; shame to your estate,
And eyesore to our solemn festival. Shakespeare.

As soon as the two lords came thither they covered, to the trouble of the other; but having presently to speak, they were quickly freed from that eyesore. Clarendon.

Mordecai was an eyesore to Haman. L'Estr.

He's the best piece of man's flesh in the market; not an eyesore in his whole body. Dryden.

EYESOTTED. adj. [eye and spot.] Marked with spots like eyes.

Nor Juno's bird, in her eyespotted train,
So many goodly colours doth contain. Spenser.

EYESTRING. n. f. [eye and string.] The string of the eye; the tendon by which the eye is moved.

I would have broke mine eyestrings; cracks them, but
To look upon him. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To know whether the sheep are sound or not, see that their gums be red and the eyestrings ruddy. Mortimer.

EYETOOTH. n. f. [eye and tooth.] The tooth in the upper jaw next on each side to the grinders; the fang.

The next tooth on each side stronger and in English eyetooth, to tear the more tough sort of aliments. Ray on the Creation.

EYEWINK. n. f. [eye and wink.] A wink, as a hint or token.

They would have won any woman's heart;
and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her. Shakespeare.

EYEWITNESS. n. f. [eye and witness.] An ocular evidence; one who gives testimony to facts seen with his own eyes.

We made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; and were eyewitnesses of his majesty. 1 Peter.

E Y R

To meet him all his saints, who silent stood Eyewitnesses of his almighty acts,
 With jubilee advanc'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
 The curious, by laying together circumstances, attestations, and characters of those who are concerned in them, either receive or reject what at first but eyewitnesses could absolutely believe or disbelieve. Addison on the Christian Religion.

EYRE. n. f. [eyre, French; iter, Latin.]
 The court of justices itinerant; and justices in

E Y R

eyres are those only, which Bracton in many places calls justiciarii itinerantes. The eyre also of the forest is nothing but the justice-seat, otherwise called; which is, or should, by ancient custom, be held every three years by the justices of the forest,
 journeying up and down to that purpose. Cowell.

EY'RY. n. f. [from ey an egg.] The place where birds of prey build their nests and hatch.

E Y R

But I was born so high,
 Our eyrie buildeth in the cedars top,
 And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Shakspeare's Richard III.
 The eagle, and the stork,
 On cliffs and cedar-tops their eyries build. Milton.
 Some haggard hawk, who had her eyrie nigh,
 Well pounc'd to fasten, and well wing'd to fly.
Dryden.

F.

F A B

F, A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, which yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Islandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

FABA'CEUS. adj. [fabaceus, Lat.] Having the nature of a bean. Diä.

FA'BLE. n. f. [fable, French; fabula,
 Latin.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.

Jotham's fable of the trees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addison.

2. A fiction in general.

*Triptolemus, so sung the nine,
 Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
 But, spite of all those fable-makers,
 He never sow'd on Almain acres.* Dryden.

Palladius coming to die somewhere in the north part of Britain, may seem to give some kind of countenance to those fables that make him to have lived many years among the Scots. Lloyd.

3. A vitious or foolish fiction.

But refuse profane and old wives fables.
Timothy.

4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatick.

The moral is the first business of the poet:
 this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison's Spectator.

5. A lie; a vitious falsehood. This sense is merely familiar.

F A B

It would look like a fable to report that this gentleman gives away a great fortune by secret methods. Addison.

To FA'BLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.

That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
 Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
 Old poets mention fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
 That wav'ring conquest still desires to rove!
 In Marlbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell.
Prior.

2. To tell falsehoods; to lie; a familiar use.

He fables not: I hear the enemy. Shakspeare.

To FA'BLE. v. a. To feign; to tell falsely.

We mean to win,
 Or turn this heaven itself into the hell
 Thou fablest. Milton's Par. Lost.

Ladies of th' Hesperides, they seem'd
 Fairer than feign'd of old, or fabl'd since
 Of fairy damsels met in forest wide,
 By knights. Milton's Paradise Lost.

FA'BLED. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.

Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!
 Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Ticket.

1. To build; to construct.

2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scottish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricated.

FABRICATION. n. f. [from fabricate.]
 The act of building; construction.

This fabrication of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth
 the first rudiments of the human nature.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FA'BRICK. n. f. [fabrica, Latin.]

1. A building; an edifice.

There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for beauty as strength of the fabric. Watson.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts.

F A C

Still will ye think it strange,
 That all the parts of this great fabrick change;
 Quit their old station and primeval frame. Prior.

To FA'BRICK. v. a. [from the noun.]

To build; to form; to construct.

Shew what laws of life
 The cheefe inhabitants observe, and how Fabrick their mansions. Philips.

 observations for twenty thousand years. Abbot.

FA'BULOUS. adj. [fabulosus, Latin.]

Feigned; full of fables, or invented tales.

A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless.
Addison's Spectator.

FA'BULOUSLY. adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction; in a fabulous manner.

There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brown.

FACE. n. f. [face, French, from facies,
 Latin.]

1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses,
 that the skin of Moses's face shone. Exod.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon.

From beauty still to beauty ranging,
 In every face I found a dart. Addison's Spectator.

2. Countenance; cast of the features;
 look; air of the face.

Kick'd out, we set the best face on't we could.

Dryden's Virgil.

Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!

Who can't be silent, and who will not lye:

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;

And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

3. The surface of any thing.

A mill water'd the whole face of the ground.

Georgics.

4. The front or forepart of any thing.
The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Ezekiel.

5. Visible state of affairs.
He look'd, and saw the face of things quite chang'd.

The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton.
This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison.

6. Appearance; resemblance; look.
Keep still your former face, and mix again
With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em;

For such are treasons. Ben Jonson.
At the first shock, with blood and powder stain'd,

Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;
Fury and art produce effects so strange,
They trouble nature, and her visage change.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

7. Preference; sight; state of confrontation.
Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall stay her before his face. Numbers.

Jove cannot fear; then tell me to my face,
That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryden.

8. Confidence; boldness; freedom from bashfulness or confusion.

They're thinking, by his face,
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

How many things are there which a man cannot with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon.

You'll find the thing will not be done
With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have stolen. L'Estrange.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations. Tillotson.

9. Distortion of the face.
Sname itself!
Why do you make such faces? Shakespeare.

Wherein her face she often viewed fain. Fairy Q.
My lips will be fain when I sing unto thee,
and so will my soul whom thou hast delivered. Psalms.

2. Forced; obliged; compelled. [This signification seems to have arisen from the mistake of the original signification in some ambiguous expressions: as, I was fain to do this, would equally suit with the rest of the sentence, whether it was understood to mean I was compelled, or I was glad to do it for fear of worse. Thus the primary meaning seems to have been early lost.]

Every weight to shroud it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fain. Spenser.

Whoever will hear, he shall find God; whosoever will study to know, shall be also fain to believe. Hooker.

At the same time that the storm bears upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another. Addison.

65. FALL is one of those general words of which it is very difficult to ascertain or detail the full signification. It retains in most of its senses some part of its primitive meaning, and implies either literally or figuratively descent, violence, or suddenness. In many of its senses it is opposed to rise; but in others has no counterpart or correlative.

To FALL. v. a.

1. To drop; to let fall.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword, despair and die. Shakespeare's Richard III.

If that the earth could trem with woman's tears,
Each drop, the falls, would prove a crocodile. Shakespeare's Othello.

Draw together;
And when I rear my hand, do you the like,
To fall it on Gonzalo. Shakespeare's Tempest.

I am willing to fall this argument: 'tis free for every man to write or not to write in verse, as he thinks it is or is not his talent, or as he imagines the audience will receive it. Dryden.

2. To sink; to deprecis: the contrary to raise.

If a man would endeavour to raise or fall his voice still by half notes, like the stops of a lute, or by whole notes alone without half, as far as an eight, he will not be able to frame his voice unto it. Bacon's Natural History.

3. To diminish; to let sink: opposed to raise.

Upon lessening interest to four per cent. you fall the price of your native commodities, or lessen your trade, or else prevent not the high use. Locke.

5. Ruin; dissolution.

Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose flight

Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height;
Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time, or fire,

Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire. Dennis.

6. Downfal; loss of greatness; declension

from eminence; degradation; state of being deposted from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness, or from virtue to corruption. In a sense like this we say the fall of man, and the fall of angels.

Her memory served as an accuser of her change, and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall. Sidney.

Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and do'st enquire
Of my restraint: why here I live alone;
And pittied this my miserable fall. Daniel.

He, careless now of interest, fame, or fate,
Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great;
Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,
Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall. Pope.

7. Declension of greatness, power, or dominion.

Till the empire came to be settled in Charles the Great, the fall of the Romans huge dominion concurring with other universal evils, caused those times to be days of much affliction and trouble throughout the world. Hosker.

8. Diminution; decrease of value.

That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London. Child.

9. Declination or diminution of sound; cadence; close of musick.

That strain again; it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet South
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing and giving odours. Shakespeare.

How sweetly did they float upon the wings
Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night,
At ev'ry fall smoothing the raven down
Of darkness 'till it smil'd! Milton.

10. Declivity; steep descent.

Waters when beat upon the shore, or strained, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise. Bacon.

11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals. Shakespeare.

A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, these things made them to swoon for fear. W. Shal.

Down through the crannies of the living walls
The crystal streams descend in murmur'g falls. Dryden.

The swain, in barren deserts, with surprise
Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;
And starts, amidst the thirsty wilds, to hear
New falls of water murmur'ing in his ear. Pope.

Now under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
He makes his moan;
And calls her ghost,
For ever, ever, ever lost! Pope's St. Cecilia.

Now, fy upon my false French; by mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate. Shaksp.

6. Not honest; not just.

The true prince may, for recreation, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the times want countenance. Shaksp.

Men are sponges, which, to pour out, receive;
Who know false play, rather than lose, deceive. Dante.

7. Treacherous; perfidious; traiterous; deceitful; hollow.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin
That has a name. Shaksp.
False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand. Shaksp.

A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him. Bacon.
So hast thou cheated Thebes with a wile,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free. Dryden.

The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love in forsaking Dido. Dryden's Virgil.

8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real: as, a false diamond.

False tear true pity moves: the king commands
To loose his fetters. Dryden's Amos.

9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.

FALSE. adv. Not truly; not honestly; not exactly; falsely.

What thou would'st highly,
That thou would'st hostily; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongfully win. Shaksp.

TO FALSE. v. a. [from the noun.] This word is now out of use.

1. To violate by failure of veracity.

It's not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou falsedst hath thy faith with perjury! Fairy Q.

2. To deceive.

Fair seemly pleasure each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit;
And in his falst fancy he her takes
To be the fairest wight that lived yet. F. Quern.

3. To defeat; to balk; to evade.

But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wife, and closely did await Advantage, whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him strait,
And falsed oft his blows t' illude him with such bait. Fairy Queen.

FALSEHEARTED. adj. [false and heart.] Treacherous; peridious; deceitful; hollow.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and falsehearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, he noted. Bacon.

FALSEHOOD. n. f. [from false.]

1. Want of truth; want of veracity.

Artificer of fraud; he was the first
That practis'd falsehood under saintly show. Milton.

All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things. South.

2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and colour serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heav'nly form, pretended
To hellish falsehood, snare them. Milton.

3. A lie; a false assertion.

In your answers there remains falsehood. Job.

4. Counterfeit; imposture.

For no falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness. Milton.

FALSELY. adv. [from false.]

1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.

Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely but infidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing prophecy and religion. Government of the Tongue.

Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whose fleet more mighty every day became
By late success, which they did falsely boast,
And now by first appearing seem'd to claim. Dryden's Ann. Mir.

Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;
Falsely, for had he truly lov'd, at least
He would have giv'n one day to my request. Dryden's Aureng.

Such as are treated ill, and upbraided falsely, find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to sooth their secret resentments. Addison's Spectator.

2. Erroneously; by mistake.

He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us. Smalridge.

3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.

FALSENESS. n. f. [from false.]

1. Contrariety to truth.

2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.

Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? Tidolfson.

3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falseness or foulness of intentions, especially to perfonated devotion. Hammond.

4. Treachery; perfidy; traitorousness.

King Richard might create a perfect guess,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would off that seed grow to a greater falseness. Shakespeare's Henry 3v.

The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falseness, or cheated by the avance of such a servant. Rogers.

FALSER. n. f. [from false.] A deceiver; a hypocrite. Obsolete.

Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pardie, does all them remain,
That of such falser's friendship been fain. Spenser's Fa.

FALSIFIABLE. adj. [from falsify.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.

FALSIFICATION. n. f. [falsification, French; from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. Hooker.

To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits divine honour. Bacon.

2. Confutation.

The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this stile, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification. Brown.

FALSIFIER. n. f. [from falsify.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs. Boyle.

2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.

Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others that put their shame the worst together. L'Estrange.

TO FALSIFY. v. a. [falsifier, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something far that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse that church, which through corrupt translations of scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, propoeth that to the people of God as scripture, which is in truth no scripture. Hooker.

The Irish bards use to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man. Spenser on Ireland.

Falsifying the balance by deceit. Amos.

2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish economy, when Jews and pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Addison.

3. To violate; to break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled. Sidney.

He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate. Knox's History.

This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trust. Decay of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rath'd away, his ample shield
Is falsify'd, and round with jav'ins fill'd. Dryd.
Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a pointed language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, ex græco fonte cadant, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:

*Ma se l'Uliero d'Ambra perfetta,
Che mai poter fallarlo in nessun canto.*

Ariosto, cant. xvi.

Falsar cannot otherwise be turned than by falsified: for his shield was falsified, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins. Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalize the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

TO FALSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South.

FALSITY. n. f. [falsify, Latin.]

1. Falshood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker.

Can you on him such falsities obtrude?

And as a mortal the most wife delude? Sandys.

Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding. South.

2. A lie; an error; a false assertion or position.

That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the north, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities. Glanville's Sceptis.

TO FALTER. v. n. [falter, to be wanting, Spanish; vasalur, a stammerer, Islandick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling every vein,

Tell on, quoth she. Fairy Queen.

The pale assistants on each other start'd,
With gaping mouths forissing words prepar'd;
The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryden.

He changes, gods! and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his look, declare him guilty. South.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king Shall falter under foul rebellious arms. Shakspeare.

He found his legs falter. Wise man's Surgery.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far idiots are concerned in the want of weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover. Lacks.

TO FALTER. v. a. To sift; to cleanse.

This word seems to be merely rustick or provincial.

Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, seeds, and oats. Mastimer's Husbandry.

FALTERINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

To FA'MBLE. v. n. [famler, Danish.]
To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Skinner.

FAME. n. f. [fama, Latin; φάμα.]

1. Celebrity; renown.

The house to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnificent, of fame and of glory throughout all countries. Chronicles.

The desire of fame will not suffer endowments to lie useless. Addison's Spectator.

What is this fame, for which we thoughts employ,

The owner's wife which other men enjoy? Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt. Joshua.

I shall show what are true fames. Piscon.

FA'MED. adj. [from fame.] Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.

He is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer. Shakespeare.

He purposes to seek the Clarian god,
Avoiding Delphos, his more fam'd abode,
Since Pulegian robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.

Aristides was an Athenian philosopher, famed for his learning and wisdom; but converted to christianity. Addison.

FA'MELESS. adj. [from fame.] Having no fame; without renown. Not in use.

Then let me, fameless, love the fields and woods,
The fruitful water'd vales and running floods. May's Virgil.

FAM'LIAR. adj. [familiaris, Latin.]

1. Domestick; relating to a family.

They range familiar to the dome. Pope.

2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar. Shakespeare.

Be not too familiar with Poina; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Shakespeare.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.

Kalandar straight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.

I see not how the scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened. Hooker.

Let us chuse such noble counsel,
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shaksp.

Our sweet
Recess and only consolation left Familiar to our eyes! Milton's Paradise Lost.

One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance. Watts on the Mind.

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.

Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd

In temper and in nature, will receive Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton.

The senses at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them. Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I, could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and dissolution. Gulliver's Travels.

Patient permit the sadly-pleasing strain,
Familiar now with grief, your tears restrain. Pope.

6. Common; frequent.

To a wrong hypothesis may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this. Locke.

7. Easy; unconstrained.

He utters
His muse, and sports in loose familiar strains. Addison.

8. Too nearly acquainted.

A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad, and could not prove it, the priest sued him for defamation. Camden.

FAM'LIAR. n. f.

1. An intimate; one long acquainted.

The king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar. Shakespeare.

When he finds himself avoided and neglected by his familiar, this affects him. Rogers.

2. A demon supposed to attend at call.

Love is a familiar; there is no evil angel but love. Shakespeare.

FAM'LIARITY. n. f. [familiarité, Fr. from familiar.]

1. easiness of conversation; omission of ceremony; affability.

2. Acquaintance; habitude.

We contract at last such an intimacy and familiarity with them, as makes it difficult and irksome for us to call off our minds. Atterbury.

3. Easy intercourse.

They say any mortals may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle spirits. Pope.

To FAM'LIAR'IZE. v. a. [familiariser, French.]

1. To make familiar; to make easy by habitude; to make common.

2. To bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions. Addison's Spectator.

FAM'LIARLY. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.

Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your familiarity will jest upon my love. Shaksp.

He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the tilt-yard, and then he broke his head. Shakespeare.

The governor came to us, and, after salutations, said familiarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and sat him down. Bacon.

2. Commonly; frequently; with the unconcernedness or easiness of long custom.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon. Raleigh's History.

3. Easily; without solemnity; without formality.

Horace still charms with graceful negligence,
And without method talks us into sense;
Will, like a friend, familiarly convey
The truest notions in the easiest way. Pope.

FAM'ILLE. [en famille, French.] In a family way; domestically.

Delude mortals, whom the great
Chuse for companions ete-a-ete;
Who at their dinners, en famille,
Get leave to sit where'er you will. Swift.

FA'MILY. n. f. [familia, Latin; famille, French.]

1. Those who live in the same house; household.

The night made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat. Swift.

2. Those that descend from one common progenitor; a race; a tribe; a generation.

Of Gerðon was the family of the Libnites. Numbers.

3. A course of descent; a genealogy.

If thy ancient but ignoble blood
Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood,
Go and complain thy family is young,
Nor own thy fathers have been fools so long. Pope.

4. A class; a tribe; a species.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watry. Bacon.

FA'MINE. n. f. [famine, French; fames, Latin.] Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
'Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shaksp.

Famines have not been of late observed, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea, but principally by the goodness of God. Hale.

This city never felt a siege before,
But from the lake receiv'd its daily store;
Which now shut up, and millions crowded here,
Famine will soon in multitudes appear. Dryden.

To FAM'ISH. v. a. [from fames, Lat. famis, old French.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.

What, did he marry me to famish me? Shaksp.
The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel,
And Sisyphus, that labours up the hill
The rowing rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel. Dryden.

2. To kill by deprivation or denial of any thing necessary to life. Milton uses it with of.

Thin air
Above the clouds will pine his entrails gross,
And famish him of breath; if not of bread. Milton.

To FA'MISH. v. n. To die of hunger; to suffer extreme hunger.

You are all resolved rather to die than to famish. Shakespeare.

FA'MISHMENT. n. f. [from famish.] The pain of hunger; want of food.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy gut bestow
Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd potion drank't. Hobart.

FAM'O'SITY. n. f. [from famous.] Renown; celebrity.

DiD.

FA'MOUS. adj. [fameux, French; famosus, Latin.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the fifth, too famous to live long;
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown. Numbers.

She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her. Esch.

Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and wine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was surnamed Rupographus. Peasam on Drawing.

I shall be nam'd among the *famous*est
Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton.

Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bouillon, turned into English by Fairfax. Dryden.

1. It has sometimes a middle signification, and imports fame whether for good or ill.

Menecrates and Menas, famous pyrates,
Make the sea serve them. Shakspeare

FAMOUSLY. adv. [from famous.] With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched
With politick grave counsell; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace Shakspeare
They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Grew's Cosmologia.

FAMOUSNESS. n. f. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

FAN. n. f. [vannus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scarfs, and fans, and double change of brav'ry,

With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knav'ry. Shakspeare.

Flavin, the least and slightest toy
Can with restless art employ:
In other hands the fan would rove
An engine of small force in love;
But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or safely seen,
Directs its wanton motions so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;
Gives coolness to the matchless dame,
To every other breath a flame. Atterbury.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before. Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to shew him such a fan of feathers. L'Estrange.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed. [van, French.]

Faile, strawfork, and rake, with a fan that is strong. Tupper.

Ass shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan. Isaiah.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shakspeare.

For the cleaning of corn is commonly used either a wicker-fan, or a fan with sails. Merr.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The pris'ner, with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,

And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counsels: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love. Hobbes.

To FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves. Speator.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakspeare's Coriol.

The Norweyan banners float the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

The air
Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:

From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,
'Till ev'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;
To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose:

The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose. Dryden's Cym. and Iphig.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,

And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves. Dryden.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Not to the wicked; but as chaff, which fann'd,
The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand in judgment. Milton.

FANATICISM. n. f. [from fanatic.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies. Rogers.

FANATIC. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, French.] Enthusiastick; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

Ofiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and forceries abus'd Fanatic Egypt, and her priests, to seek Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton.

FANATIC. n. f. [from the adjective.]

An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine, than the tumultuary weapon snatch'd up by a fanatic. Decay of Piety.

FANCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason: of persons.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. Dictated by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images: of things.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings? and how foolish and fanciful were they? Hayward.

It would shew as much singularity to deny this,
as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it. Guth.

FANCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

FANCIFULNESS. n. f. [from fanciful.]
Addiction to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale.

FANCY. n. f. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; φαντασία.] It should be phantasy.

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakspeare, fancy's sweetest child!
Warble his native wood-notes wild. Milton.

In the soul
Are many lesser faculties, that serve Reason as chief: among these fancy next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, airy shapes,

Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence which gives as full satisfaction, and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:

Whom we now a golden call,
Divinely grac'd in every feature,
Strait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature:
Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Men's private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hoskar.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Tale; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of torrest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on? Shakspeare.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling. L'Estrange.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of single life. Shakspeare.

A resemblance in humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection. Collier.

6. In Shakspeare it signifies love.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourish'd?
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shakspeare.

7. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden.

The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbutnot.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. False notion.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal substance, are but fancies:
the cause is, for that those things have pass'd their period, and nourish not. Bacon's Natural History.

9. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value.

London-pride is a pretty fancy for borders. Mortimer.

- To FANCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Strutt's Sermons.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

To FANCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;

Who mighty thought can clothe with manly dress,
He whom I fancy, but can never express.

Dryden's Journal.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Nous both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her to strongly, as neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband.

Raleigh's History.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleaseth to fancy.

Swift.

FANCY-MONGER. n. f. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forests, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancy-monger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him.

Shakespeare.

FANCY-SICK. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unbound; one whose dilemma is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come to be fancy-sick, there's no cure.

L'Estrange.

FAND for found. It is retained in Scotland.

This when as true by tryal he out fand,
He bade to open wide his brazen gate.

Spenser.

FANE. n. f. [fane, French; fanum, Lat.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion. A poetical word.

Not fane nor capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege!

Shakespeare's Coriol.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now the seem'd.

Dryden's Æneid.

Yet some to fane's repair'd, and humble rites
Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods,
Who with their votaries in one ruin shar'd.

Philips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,
Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb.

Titchel.

The fields are ravish'd from the industrious
swains,

From men their cities, and from gods their fanes.

Pope.

FANFARON. n. f. [French, from the Spanish. Originally in Arabick it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Menage.]

1. A bully; a hector.

Vulgar makes Æneas a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or hector.

Dryden.

2. A blusterer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in feats of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it.

L'Estrange.

FANFARONADE. n. f. [from fanfaron, French.] A bluster; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfarons of monsieur Bouffours.

Swift.

TO FANG. v. a. [fanxan, Saxon; vangen, Dutch.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch. To vang is yet used in Devonshire Destitution fang mankind!

Shaksp. Timon.

FANG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal by which the prey is seized and held; any thing like them.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
This is no flattery.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs or tusks; as boars, pikes, salmon, and dogs, though less.

Bacon.

Prepar'd to fly,

The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain The bulk; the bulk unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain.

Dryden.

Then charge, provoke the lion to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground.

Addison.

2. The nails; the talons.

3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoles.

Evelyn's Calendar.

FANG'ED. adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,
Whom I will trust as I will adders fang'd,
They bear the mandate.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:
In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,

Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And strew a dreadful harvest on the plain.

Philips's Briton.

FANGLE. n. f. [from fengan, Sax. to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new: as, new fangles, new fangleness.

FANGLED. adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gawdy; ridiculously showy; vainly decorated: new fangled, is therefore new-fashioned; dressed out in new decorations.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose unconstant.

Ascham.

A book! oh, rare one!
Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FANGLESS. adj. [from fang.] Toothless; without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his pow'r, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FANGOT. n. f. A quantity of wares: as raw silk, &c. containing from one to two hundred weight three quarters.

DiC.

FANNEL. n. f. [fanel, French.] A sort of ornament like a scarf, worn about the left arm of a male-priest when he officiates.

DiC.

FANNER. n. f. [from fan.] One that plays a fan.

I will send unto Babylon fanners that shall fan her.

Jeremiah.

FANTASIED. adj. [from fantasia.] Filled with fancies or imaginations.

As I travell'd hither through the land,
I found the people strangely fantastical.

Shaksp.

FANTASM. n. f. [See PHANTASM.] A thing not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FANTASTICAL. } adj. [fantastique, Fr. FANTA'STICK. } from fantasia.]

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.

The delight that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preter-natural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of.

Smith.

2. Subsisting only in the fancy; imaginary.

Present fears

Are less than horrible imaginings:

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes to my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in remorse; and nothing is,
But what is not.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastical ideas of a busy imagination.

Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally.

Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye show?

Shakespeare.

4. Uncertain; unsteady; irregular.

Nor happiness can I, nor misery feel,
From any turn of her fantastical wheel.

Prior.

5. Whimsical; fanciful; capricious; humorous; indulgent of one's own imagination.

They put such words in the mouths of one of these fantastical mind-infected people, that children and musicians call lovers.

Sidney.

I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd conceited true love knots:
To be fantastical, may become a youth
Of greater time than I.

Shakespeare.

Duomvir is provided with an imperious, expensive, and fantastical mistress; to whom he retires from the conversation of a discreet and affectionate wife.

Taylor.

We are apt to think your metallists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon their coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed.

Addison.

FANTA'STICALLY. adv. [from fantastical.]

1. By the power of imagination.

2. Capriciously; humorously; unsteadily.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastical borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Shakespeare.

3. Whimsically; in compliance with imagination.

One cannot so much as fantastical chuse, even or odd, he thinks not why.

Grew's Cosmol.

FANTA'STICALNESS. } n. f. [from fan- FANTA'STICKNESS. } tistical.]

1. Humorousness; mere compliance with fancy.

2. Whimsicalness; unreasonableness.

I dare not assure to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it.

Tillotson, Pref.

3. Caprice; unsteadiness.

FANTASY. n. f. [fantasie, French; phantasia, Latin; fantasia.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.

How now, Horatio! you tremble and look pale!

Is not this something more than fantasy? Shak.

I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more unconstant than the wind. Shaksp.
He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies. Shaksp.
Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy,
Sleep the as found as careless infancy. Shaksp.
These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell. Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there. Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.

And with the fug'ly sweet thereof allure,
Chaste ladies ears to fantasies impure. Hubb. Ta.
3. Humour; inclination.

I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the scriptures to your fantasies and affections. Whigist.

FA'NTOM. n. f. [See PHANTOM.] Something not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FAR. adj. Fuddled; drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakspere.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses; and being far, far, was, as they say, cashiered. Shakspere.

FAR. adv. [peon, Saxon; fatt, Erse.]

1. To great extent in length.
Pay sacred reverence to Apollo's song,
Left wrathful the far-shooting god omit
His fatal arrows. Prior.

2. To a great extent every way. This is less proper.

Vast and great
Is what I love; the far extended ocean
To a little riv'let I prefer. Prior.
With costly eates Rome stain'd her frugal hoard;
Then with ill-gotten gold she bought a lord:
Corruption, discord, luxury combin'd,
Down sunk the far-fam'd mistress of mankind. Arbutnot.

From the same lineage stern Aetes came,
The far-fam'd brother of th' enchantress dame. Pope.

3. To a great distance progressively.
Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far As who goes farthest. Shaksp. Julius Caesar.
Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakspere's Macb.
Far from that hated face the Trojans fly;
All but the fool who sought his destiny. Dryden.

4. Remotely; at a great distance.
He meant to travel into far countries, until his friends affection either ceased or prevailed. Sidon.
In a kingdom rightly ordered, after a law is once published, it presently takes effect far and wide; all states framing themselves thereunto. Hooker.

And after that long strayed here and there,
Through every field and forest far and near. Hubbard's Tale.

Far be it from me to justify the cruelties used towards them, which had their reward soon after. Bacon's Holy War.

He sent light horsemen into Mesopotamia with a guide, because the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with all his army. Kneller.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects nigh and far,
Look not into this little world of mine. Davies.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts, and notions vain. Milton.

I have been hunting up and down, far and near, since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy. L'Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by publick voice. Dryden.

The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away. Dryden.

But from the reading of my book and me,
Be far, ye foes of virtuous poetry!
Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe. Dryden's Persius.

Far off you view them with a longing eye
Upon the topmost branch. Dryden.
These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find quite the contrary. Locke.

'Till on the Po his blasted corps was hurl'd, Far from his country in the western world. Addison's Ovid.

5. To a distance.
As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him. Psalms.

Neither did those that were sent, and travelled far off, undertake so difficult enterprises without a conductor. Raleigh.

But all in vain! which when he saw, he ceas'd Contending, and remov'd his tents far off. Milton.

I had always a curiosity to look back into the sources of things, and view in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burnet's Theory.

A lion's hide around his loins he wore;
The well poir'd javelin to the field he bore,
Pour'd to blood; the far destroying dart,
And the best weapon, an undaunted heart. Addison's Ovid.

6. In a great part.
When they were by Jesus the day was far spent. Judges.

7. In a great proportion; by many degrees. It is commonly used with some word noting the comparative, but Dryden has used it absolutely.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. Proverbs.

Such a communication passeth far better through the water than air. Bacon's Nat. History.

Those countries have far greater rivers, and far higher mountains to pour down waters, than any part of the old world. Bacon.

In ancient times, doth differ far
From what our fiery battles are. Waller.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved. Tillotson.

Latin is a more succinct language than the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them. Dryden.

The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryd.

Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,
With you immortal, and with beauty blest. Pope.

Ah! hope not yet to breathe thy native air;
Far other journey first demands thy care. Pope.

8. To a great height; magnificently. This is perhaps only in Shakspere.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.
—You speak him far.
—I don't extend him, sir. Cymbeline.

9. To a certain point; to a certain degree.
The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself. Hooker.

Answer them
How far forth you do like their articles. Shakspere's Henry iv.

Not to resolve, is to resolve; and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far in some other sort, as to resolve. Bacon.

Of this I need not many words to declare how far it is from being so much as any part of repentance. Hammond.

My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions; that it is a perfect contradiction to it. Tillotson.

The custom of these tongues sometimes so far influences the expressions, that in these epistles one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

10. FAR off. At a great distance.

For though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore. Milton.

11. FAR off. To a great distance.

Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life. Milton.

12. Off is joined with far, when far, noting distance, is not followed by a preposition: as, I set the boat far off, I set the boat far from me.

13. FAR is used often in composition: as, far-shooting, far-seeing.

FAR-FETCH. n. f. [far and fetch.] A deep stratagem. A ludicrous word.

But Jesuits have deeper reaches,
In all their politick far-fetches;
And from their Coptick priest, Kircherus, Found out this mytick way to jcer us. Hudib.

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [far and fetch.]

1. Brought from places remote.
Of these things others quickly will dispose,
Whole pains have earn'd the far-fetch'd spoil. Milton.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the far-fetch'd gold into the mine,
And that which brib'd our fathers made our price. Dryden.

2. Studiously fought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.

York, with all his far-fetch'd policy. Shaksp.
For far-fetch'd rhymes make puzzled angels strain,
And in low prose dull Lucifer complain. Smith.

Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetch'd analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted. Watts.

FAR-PIERCING. adj. [far and pierce.]
Striking, or penetrating a great way.

Atlas, her fire, to whose far-piercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded lie;
Th' eternal columbia which on earth he rears,
End in the stary vault and prop the spheres. Pope's Odyssey.

FAR-SHOOTING. adj. [far and shoot.]
Shooting to a great distance.

Then loud he call'd Aeneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Aeneas came;

FECUNDITY. n. f. [from fecund; secundité, French.]

1. Fruitfulness; quality of producing or bringing forth in great abundance.

I appeal to the animal and vegetable productions of the earth, the vast numbers whereof notoriously testify the extreme luxuriance and fecundity of it. Woodward.

2. Power of producing or bringing forth.

Some of the ancients mention some seeds that retain their fecundity forty years; and I have found that melon-seeds, after thirty years, are best for raising of melons. Ray.

God could never create so ample a world, but he could have made a bigger; the fecundity of his creative power never growing barren, nor being exhausted. Bentley.

FED. The pret. and part. pass. of To feed.

For on the grassy verdure as he lay,
And breath'd the freshness of the early day,
Devouring dogs the helpless infant tore,
Fed on his trembling limbs, and lapp'd the gore. Pope.

FE'DARY. n. f. [ſadus, Latin, or from ſoudum.] This word, peculiar to Shakespeare, may signify either a confederate; a partner; or a dependent.

Damn'd paper!
Black as the ink that's on thee, senseless bauble!
Art thou a ſedary for this act, and lookest
So virgin-like without? Shakespeare's Cymb.

FE'DERAL. adj. [from ſadus, Latin.]

Relating to a league or contract.

It is a ſederal rite betwixt God and us, as eating and drinking, both among Jews and heathens, was wont to be. Hammond.

The Romans compelled them, contrary to all ſederal right and justice, both to part with Sardinia, their lawful territory, and also to pay them for the future a double tribute. Grow.

FE'DERARY. n. f. [from ſadus, Latin.]

A confederate; an accomplice.

She's a traitor, and Camillo is A ſedary with her. Shakespeare.

FE'DERATE. adj. [ſederatus, Latin.]

Leagued; joined in confederacy.

FEE. n. f. [feoh, Saxon; fee, Danish, cattle; ſeudum, low Latin; ſeu, Scottish.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord.

All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and ſeudum; allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgement of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. ſeudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of ſeudum; for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has ſus perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seised in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special, is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Corwell.

Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
Or sell fee-simples in his master's name. Hubb. Ta.
Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Shakespeare.

2. Property; peculiar.

What concern they?

The general cause? or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast? Shakespeare.

3. Reward; gratification; recompense.

These be the ways by which, without reward,
Livings in courts be gotten, though toil hard;
For nothing there is done without a ſee. Hubb. Ta.

Not helping, death's my ſee;

But if I help, what do you promise me? Shakespeare.

4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.

Now that God and friends

Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,

At our enlargement what are thy due ſees? Shak.

5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.

He does not refuse doing a good office for a man because he cannot pay the ſee of it. Addison.

6. Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.

In pruning and trimming all manner of trees,
Reserve to each cattle their property ſee. Tupper.

FE'FARM. n. f. [ſee and farm.]

Tenure by which lands are held of a superior lord.

John surrendered his kingdoms to the pope, and took them back again, to hold in ſe-farm; which brought him into such hatred, as all his lifetime after he was possess with fear. Duval.

To FEE. v. a. from the noun.

1. To reward; to pay.

No man fees the sun, no man purchases the light, nor cits if he walks by it. South.
Watch the disease in time; for when within
The dropsy rages and extends the skin,
In vain for hellebore the patient cries,
And fees the doctor; but too late is wife. Dryd.

2. To bribe; to hire; to purchase.

I have long loved her, and ingrossed opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her.
Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. To keep in hire.

There's not a thane of them but in his house I have a servant feed. Shakspere's Macbeth.

FEEBLE. adj. [foible, French.] Weak; debilitated; sickly; infirm; without strength of body or mind.

The men carried all the feeble upon asses to Jericho. a Chron.

Command th' assistance of a faithful friend,
But feeble are the succours I can send. Dryden.
How I have lov'd, excuse my falt'ring tongue;
My spirits feeble, and my pains are strong. Dryden.

We carry the image of God in us, a rational and immortal soul; and though we be now miserable and feeble, yet we aspire after eternal happiness, and finally expect a great exaltation of all our natural powers. Bentley.

Rhyme is a crutch that helps the weak along,
Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Smith.

To FE'EBLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To weaken; to enfeeble; to deprive of strength or power. Not in use.

Or as a castle reared high and round,
By subtle engines and malicious flight
Is undermined from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forc'd and feeble quite. Fairy Queen.

Shall that victorious hand be feeble here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement? Shaksp. King John.

FEEBLE-MINDED. adj. [feeble and mind.] Weak of mind; defective in resolution and constancy.

Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thess.

FE'EBLENESS. n. s. [from feeble.] Weakness; imbecility; infirmity; want of strength.

A better head Rome's glorious body fits,
Than his that shakes for age and *feeble*ness. Shak.
Some in their latter years, through the *feeble*ness of their limbs, have been forced to study upon their knees. South.

FE'EBLY. adv. [from feeble.] Weakly; without strength.

Like mine, thy gentle numbers feebly creep,
Thy tragick muse gives smiles, thy comick sleep. Dryden.

To FEED. v. a. [fodan, Gothick; peban, roeban, Saxon.]

1. To supply with food.

Her heart and bowels through her back he drew,
And fed the hounds that help'd him to pursue. Dryden.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight. Arbutnot.

2. To supply; to furnish.

A constant smoke rises from the warm springs that feed the many baths with which the island is furnished. Addison.

The breadth of the bottom of the hopper must be half the length of a barleycorn, and near as long as the rollers, that it may not feed them too fast. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. To graze; to consume by cattle.

Once in three years feed your mowing lands; if you cannot get manure constantly to keep them in heart. Mortimer.

The frost will spoil the grafs; for which reason take care to feed it close before winter. Mortimer.

Barbarossa learned the strength of the emperor, craftily feeding him with the hope of liberty. Knolles.

6. To delight; to entertain; to keep from satiety.

The alteration of scenes, so it be without noise, feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.

7. To make fat. A provincial use.

To FEED. v. n.

1. To take food. Chiefly applied to animals food.

To feed were best at home;
From thence the sawce to meet is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it. Shaksp. Macbeth.

2. To prey; to live by eating.

I am not covetous of gold;
Nor care I, who doth feed upon my cost. Shaksp.
You cry against the noble senate, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else
Would feed on one another. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Galen speaketh of the curing of the scirrhus of the liver by milk of a cow, that feedeth upon certain herbs. Bacon.

Some birds feed upon the berries of this vegetable. Brown.

He feeds on fruits, which of their own accord,
The willing grounds and laden trees afford. Dryden.

The Brachmans were all of the same race, lived in fields and woods, and fed only upon rice,
milk, or herbs. Temple.

All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy
Th' extensive blessing of his luxury. Pope.

3. To pasture; to place cattle to feed.

If a man shall cause a field to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field, he shall make restitution. Exodus.

4. To grow fat or plump. A provincial use.

FEED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Food; that which is eaten.

A fearful deer then looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a shugging kind of tremor through all her principal parts. Sidney.
An old worked ox eats as well as a young one: their feed is much cheaper, because they eat no oats. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Pasture.

Besides his cote, his flocks and bounds of feed
Are now on sale. Shakspere's As you like it.

3. Meal; act of eating.

Plenty hung
Tempting to nigh, to pluck and eat my fill
I spared not; for such pleasure till that hour
At feed or fountain never had I found. Milton.

FE'EDER. n. s. [from feed.]

1. One that gives food.

The beast obeys his keeper, and looks up,
Not to his master's but his feeder's hand. Denham.

2. An exciter; an encourager.

When thou do'st hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots. Shaksp.

3. One that eats.

With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder. Shakspere.

But that our seals
In every mess have folly, and the feeders
Jest with it as a custom, I should blush
To see you so attired. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrush, called the misel-thrush, or feeder upon miseltoe.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

4. One that eats in a certain mode: as, a nice feeder, a gross feeder.

But such nice feeders are no guests for me;
Rick agrees not with frugality:

Then, that unfashionable man am I,
With me they'd starve for want of ivory. Dryden.

To FEEL. v. n. pret. felt; part. pass. felt. [fehan, Saxon.]

1. To have perception of things by the touch.

The sense of feeling can give us a notion of extension, shape, and all other ideas that enter at the eye, except colours. Addison's Spectator.

2. To search by feeling. See FEELER.

They should seek the Lord, if happily they might feel after him, and find him. Acts.

3. To have a quick sensibility of good or evil, right or wrong.

Man, who feels for all mankind. Pope.

4. To appear to the touch.

Blind men say black feels rough, and white feels smooth. Dryden.

4. To have sense of external pain or pleasure.

Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel. Milton.

But why should those be thought to 'scape who feel

Those rods of scorpions and those whips of steel? Creesh.

5. To be affected by; to perceive mentally.

Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it! Shaksp.

The well-fung woes shall soothe my pensive ghost;

He best can paint them who can feel them most. Pope.

Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
E'er felt such grief, such terror, and despair. Pope.

6. To know; to be acquainted with.

His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little. Shaksp.

FEEL. n. s. [from the verb.] The sense of feeling; the touch.

The difference of these tumours will be distinguished by the feel. Sharp's Surgery.

FE'ELER. n. s. [from feel.]

1. One that feels.

This hand, whose touch,
Whose ev'ry touch would force the feeler's soul
To th' oath of loyalty. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

2. The horns or antennae of insects.

Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennae; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennae, I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted. Denham's Physico-Theology.

FE'ELING. participial adj. [from feel.]

1. Expressive of great sensibility.

O wretched state of man in self-division!
O well thou say'st a feeling declaration

Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision! Sidney.

Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney.
Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears

Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity. Shakespeare.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare.

I had a feeling sense
Of all your royal favours; but this last Strikes through my heart. Southerne.

FEELING. n. f. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.

Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd;
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through every pore? Milton.

2. Power of action upon sensibility.

The apprehension of the good
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse. Shak.

3. Perception; sensibility.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects.

Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it. Bacon's Essays.

As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.

FEELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.

The princes might judge that he meant himself, who spake so feelingly. Sidney.
He would not have talked so feelingly of Co-drus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it. Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am. Shaksp.
He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh.

FEET. n. f. The plural of foot.

His brother's image to his mind appears,
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet
with fears. Pope.

FEETLESS. adj. [from feet.] Being without feet.

Geoffrey of Bouillon broched three feetless
birds, called allerions, upon his arrow. Camden.

TO FEIGN. v. a. [feindre, French; fingo, Latin.]

1. To invent; to image by an act of the mind.

Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fere conceiv'd, Gorgons, and hydras, and chimæras dire! Milton.

2. To make a show of.

No t'ch things are done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart. Neh.
Both his hands, most filthy secular,
Above the water were on high extant,
And feigned to wash themselves incessantly. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

3. To make a show of; to do upon some false pretence.

Mc gentle Deba beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager wain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

4. To dissemble; to conceal. Obsolete.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,

At ghastly bug their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign. Fairy Queen.

TO FEIGN. v. n. To relate falsely; to image from the invention; to tell fabulously.

Therefore the poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;

Since nought to flockish, hard, and full of rage,
But musick for the time doth change his nature. Shakespeare.

FEIGNEDLY. adv. [from feign.] In fiction; not truly.

Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly
in some of the heathens. Bacon.

FEIGNER. n. f. [from feign.] Inventer; contriver of a fiction.

And these three voices differ; all the things done, the doing and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning and the feigner; so the poem, the poet, and the poet. Ben Jonson.

FEINT. participial adj. [from feign, for feigned; or feint, French.] Counterfeit; seeming.

The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it. Locke.

FEINT. n. f. [feint, French.]

1. A false appearance; an offer of something not intended to be.

Courtly's letter is but a feint to get off. Speator.

2. A mock assault; an appearance of aiming at one part, when another is intended to be struck.

But, in the breast encamp'd, prepares
For well-bred feints and future wars. Prior.

FE'LANDERS. n. f. Worms in hawks.

TO FELICITATE. v. a. [feliciter, French; felicito, Latin.]

1. To make happy.

I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys;
And find I am alone felicitate
In your dear highness' love. Shakespeare.

What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would fill and felicitate his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey! Watts.

2. To congratulate.

They might proceed unto forms of speeches, felicitating the good, or depreciating the evil to follow. Brown.

FELICITATION. n. f. [French; from felicitate.] Congratulation.

FELICITOUS. adj. [felix, Latin.] Happy.

FELICITOUSLY. adv. [from felicitous.] Happily.

FELICITY. n. f. [felicitas, Latin; felicité, French.] Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin,
And grant that we, for whom thou didst die,
Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,
May live for ever in felicity. Spenser.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity;
But virtue join'd with riches and long life,
In torporal pleasure he, and careless ease. Milt.

The felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete. Atterbury.

How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel? Rogers.

FELINE. adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver; from which he d fers principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is feline, or a long taper. Grew.

FELL. adj. [felle, Saxon.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

It seemed fury, discord, madnets fell,
Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same. Fairfax.

So selfish foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,

To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakespeare.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.

That infant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakespeare.
I know thee, love! wild as the raging main,
More fell than tigers on the Lybian plain. Pope.
Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, fellest of the fell. Thomson.

FELL. n. f. [felle, Saxon.] The skin; the hide. Not used.

Wipe thine eye;
The gougiers shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep. Shakespeare.
The time has been my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of air
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir. Shaksp.

TO FELL. v. a. [fellen, German.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.

Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shaksp.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.

Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock, and felled him. Raleigh.

His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was felled. Howel.

On their whole host I flew Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd
Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled. Milton.

2. It seems improperly joined with down or along.

Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him
down,
And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Dryd.
I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case. Dryd.

3. To hew down; to cut down.

Then would he seem a farmer that would fell Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell. Habberd's Tale.

Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flamm'd their saulchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak. Dryden.

FELL. The preterit of To fall.

None on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell

By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.

FELLER. n. f. [from fell.] One that hews down.

Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us. Isaiah.

FELLI'FLOUOUS. adj. [fel and fluo, Lat.] Flowing with gall.

FELLMONGER. n. f. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.

FELLNESS. n. f. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour sleep,
For very fellness loud he 'gan to weep. Fairy Q.

FELLOW. n. f. [felge, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written fally or felly.

Out, out, thou strumpet Fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bow the round nave down the hill of heav'n.
Shakespeare.

Axle-trees, nave, fellies and spokes were all molten. Kings.

FELLOW. n. f. [quasi, to follow, Minibew; from re, faith, and lag, bound, Saxon, Junius; fallow, Scottish.]

1. A companion; one with whom we comfort.

In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end.
Ascham's Schoolmaster.

To be your fellow,
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shaksp. Tempest.
Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryd.

2. An associate; one united in the same affair.

Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabric mounts the walls.
Dryden's Virgil.

3. One of the same kind.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.

A shepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of his fellows. L'Estrange.

4. Equal; peer.

So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer servants. Sidney.

Chieftain of the rest
I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now.
Fairfax.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.

When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice;
the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows.
Addison's Spectator.

6. One like or equal to another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; sometimes with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow.
Shakespeare.

An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crucified, but that he saved himself upon his horns. Bacon.

Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt: the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.

Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal justice to make them suffer death by their hands. Sidney.

Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodrigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd. Shak.
I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks
he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Shakespeare.

Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputation's banishment,
A fellow of no mark or likelihood. Shakespeare.

How oft the sight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for had'st thou not been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind. Shak.
The Moors' abus'd by some most villainous
knave,
Some bale notorious knave, some scurvy fellow!

The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet. L'Estrange.
As neat of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian seed
By fraud and theft asserts his father's breed.
Dryden.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as this Mr. Wood, could have got his majesty's broad seal. Swift.
You'll find, if once the monarch asks the monk,
Or, cobbler-like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.
The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man.
Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues, or of any incorporated society.
There should be a mission of three of the fellows or brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were designed. Bacon.

To FELLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match. Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow's nothing. Shakespeare.
FELLOW-COMMONER. n. f.

labours in the same design.

My fellow-labourers have commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication.
Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

FELLOW-SERVANT. n. f. One that has the same master.

Nor less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire Glarily into the ways of God with man. Milton.
Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slightest care
Than the bright dames we serve. Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants
to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children. Atterbury.

FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. f. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.
Shakespeare.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier. Philippians.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. f. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

I pry'thee, do not mock me, fellow-student.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feature in the balance with their private ends. Swift.

FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. f. One who shares in the same evils; one who partakes the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve? Dryden.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow- sufferers. Addison's Spectator.

FELLOW-WRITER. n. f. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison.

in an ill sense.

Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fellow-feeling. Arbuthnot.

FELLOWLIKE. } adj. [fellow and like.]

FELLOWLY. } Like a companion; on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he graces with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage. Carow.

One seed for another to make an exchange,
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange.
Tupper.

FELLOWSHIP. n. f. [from fellow.]

1. Companionship; comfort; society.
This boy cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship.
Shakespeare.

From blissful bow'rs
Of amarantine shade, fountain, or spring,
By th' waters of life, where'er they sat
In fellowships of joy, the sons of light Hasted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy's Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination, and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cement of society. Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.

We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shaksp.
Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves. Hooker.
Moll of the other christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knoles.

3. Equality.

4. Partnership; joint interest.

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load.
Milton's Paradise Regained.

O love! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
And will not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden

5. Company; state of being together.

The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a fail! Shak.

6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.

In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon's Essays.

7. Fitness and fondness for festal entertainments, with good prefixed.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon.

The wily fox
Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murder's deed. Dryden.

2. A whitlow, a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.

The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wise man's Surgery.

FELON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.

Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,
Might be the cause of so impatient plight!
What fury, or what fiend with felo deeds,
Hath stirred up to mischievous despite! Spenser.

Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain flows of love to veil his felo hate. Pope.

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villanous; malignant; per-fidious; destructive.

This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Watson.

O thievish night!

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
Thy nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does not touch thy fifth pen, and dies. Dryd.

FELONIOUSLY. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.FELONOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked. Not used.

I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonous force of mine enemy. Spenser.

FELONY. n. f. [from felonie, French; felonia, low Latin; from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enorthat the felt be loose. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To FELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite without weaving.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into kersey. Hale.

To FELTRE. v. a. [from felt.] To clot together like felt.

His felted locks, that on his bosom fell,
On rugged mountains briars and thorns resemble. Fairfax.

FEL'UCCA. n. f. [from seleu, French; felkon, Arabick.] A small open boat with six oars. *DiD.*FEMALE. n. f. [from femelle, French; femella, Latin.] A she; one of the sex which brings young; not male.

God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Genesis.

If he offer it of the herd, whether it be male or female, he shall offer it without blemish. Levit.

Men, mice divine,
Indo'd with int'lectual sense and soul,
Are masters to their females, and their lords. Shaksparr.

FEMALE. adj.

1. Not male.

Female of sex it seems. Milton.
Swarming next appear'd
The female bee, that feeds her husband drone. Milton.

2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.

Other furs, perhaps,
With their attendant moons thou wilt defcry,
Communicating male and female light;
Which two great sexes animate the world. Milton.

Add what wants
In female sex, the more to draw his love. Milton.

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charm. Milton.

If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen. Dryden.

3. Female Rhymes. Double rhymes so called because, in French, from which the term is taken, they end in a weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable. Convolley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems. Dryden's Pref. to Anna, Mirab.

FEME COVERT. n. f. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron. *Blount.*FEME SOLE. n. f. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.FEMIN'ALITY. n. f. [from femina, Lat.] Female nature.

Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbott.

I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shaksparr's Coriolanus.

The surface is of black fen earth. Woodward.
He to Portuna's wat'ry marishes went;
A long canal the muddy fen divides,
And with a clear unfully'd current glides. Addis.

FEN'BERRY. n. f. [from fen and berry.] A kind of blackberry. *Stinner.*FENCE. n. f. [from defence.]

1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.

That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Piety.
There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Ejrange.

To put them out of their parents view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.

Let us hear this awful corps to Caesar,
And lay it in his sight, that it may stand
A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addisn's Cato.

2. Enclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
It daring ships and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main;
Th' eternal fences overleap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?
Or the distainful sea, that, shut from thence,
Rears round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden.

Employ their wives and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surprise the fair. Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.

I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. Skill in defence.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despight his nice fence and his active practice.
Shakespeare.

To FENCE. v. a.

1. To enclose; to secure by an enclosure or hedge.

Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain Destroyed have, each field to waste is laid;
In fenced towers bestowed is their grain,
Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade.
Faust.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass,
and set darkness in my paths. Job.
Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews. Job.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Mac.
See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail or other inclosure. Styliffe's Paragon.

2. To guard; to fortify.

So much of adders wisdom I have learnt,
To fence my ear against thy forceries. Milton.
With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,
Fenced from the thorns, and trod the deep descent.
Dryden.

To FENCE. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.

He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.

If a throttle ring, he falls straight a capering:
He will fence with his own shadow. Shakespeare.

A heauteous heifer in the wood is bred;
The slooping warriors aiming head to head,
Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound
The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;
They fence and push, and, pushing, loudly roar,
Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore.
Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bul-lics and gamblers company. Locke.
These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplying.
Arbutnot and Pope.

FENCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without enclosure; open.

Each motion of the heart rises to fury,
And love in their weak bosoms is a rage
As terrible as hate, and as destructive:
So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,
And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,
Alike from north, from south. Rowe.

FENCER. n. f. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmness is great advantage; he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'ring, and enjoy his tress;
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.
A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick,
that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Nichy.

FENCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence. *Addison.*FENCINGMASTER. n. f. [fence and master.] One who teaches the science of defence, or the use of weapons.FENCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [fence and school.]

A place in which the use of weapons is taught.

If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing-school, and every day exercising.
Locke.

FEN-CRICKET. n. f. [grillotalpa.] An insect that digs itself holes in the ground.To FEND. v. a. [from defend.] To keep off; to shut out.

Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,
With fern beneath to fend the bitter cold. Dryd.

To FEND. v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.

The dexterous management of terms, and being able to find and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

FENDER. n. f. [from fend.]

1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.

2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.

FENERATION. n. f. [feneratio, Latin.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.

The hare figured not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, but feneration and usury from its fecundity and superferation. Brown.

FENNEL. n. f. [feniculum, Latin.] A plant of strong scent.

A sav'ry odour blown, more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n.
Milton.

FENNELFLOWER. n. f. [nigella.] A plant.FENNELGIANT. n. f. [ferula.] A plant.FENNY. adj. [from fen.]

1. Marshy; boggy; moonish.

The late earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, conveyed secretly all his lands to fessers in trust, in hope to have cut off her majesty from the eleventh of his lands. Spenser.

FEOFFER. n. f. [feoffator, low Latin.]

One who gives possession of any thing]

See FEOFFMENT.

FEOFFMENT. n. f. [feoffamentum, Lat.] The act of granting possession.

Any gift or grant of any honours, castles, lands, or other immoveable things, to another in fee-simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever,
by the delivery of seisin of the thing given:
when it is in writing, it is called a deed of feoff-ment; and in every feoffment the giver is called the feoffor, feoffator, and he that receiveth by virtue thereof the feoffee, feoffatus. The proper difference between a feoffer and a donor is, that the feoffer gives in fee-simple, the donor in fee-tail. Cowell.

FERACITY. n. f. [feracitas, Latin.] Fruitfulness; fertility. *DiD.*FERAL. adj. [feralis, Latin.] Funereal; deadly. *DiD.*FERIATION. n. f. [feriatio, Latin.] The act of keeping holiday; cessation from work.

this season is commonly termed the physicians vacation. Brown.

FERINE. adj. [ferinus, Latin.] Wild; savage.

The only difficulty is touching those ferine, noxious, and untameable beasts; as, lions, ty-

FERINENESS. n. f. [from ferine.] Barbarity; savageness; wildness.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life, a conversation with those that have fallen into a barbarous habit of life, would assimilate the next generation to barbarism and ferineness. Hale.

FERITY. n. f. [feritas, Latin.] Barbarity; cruelty; wildness; savageness.

He reduced him from the most sordid and stupid ferity to his senses, and to sober reason.
Woodward's Natural History.

To FERMENT. v. a. [fermento, Latin; fermenter, French.] To exalt or rarify by intestine motion of parts.

Ye vigorous swains! while youth ferment your blood,

And purer spirits swell the sprightly flood,
Now range the hills, the thickest woods beset,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net.
Pope.

To FERMENT. v. n. To have the parts put into intestine motion.FERMENT. n. f. [ferment, French; fermentum, Latin.]

1. That which causes intestine motion.

The semen puts females into a fever upon im-pregnation; and all animal humours which poison, are putrefying ferments. Floyer.

2. Intestine motion; tumult.

Subdue and cool the ferment of desire. Rogers.

FERMENTABLE. adj. [from ferment.] Capable of fermentation.FERMENTAL. adj. [from ferment.] Having the power to cause fermentation. Not used.

Cucumbers, being waterish, fill the veins with crude and windy ferocities, that contain little salt or spirit, and debilitate the vital acidity and fer-mental faculty of the stomach. Brown.

FERMENTATION. n. f. [fermentatio, Latin.] A slow motion of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles: as when heaven or yest rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together. Harris.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus ardens. Boyle.

A man by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before. Collice of Friendship

The sap, in fluent dance,
And lively fermentation, mounting, spreads
All this innumerable colour'd scene of things. Thomson.

FERMENTATIVE. adj. [from ferment.] Causing fermentation; having the power to cause fermentation.

Aromatic spirits destroy by their fermentative heat. Arbuthnot.

FERN. n. f. [Fearn, Saxon.] A plant.

The leaves are formed of a number of small pinnules, dentated on the edges, and set close one by another on slender ribs. On the back of these pinnules are produced the seeds, small and extremely numerous. The country people esteem it a sovereign remedy decocted for the rickets in children. Hill.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood,
Horrid with fern and intricate with thorn;
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dryden.

There are great varieties of fern in different parts of the world; but they are seldom cultivated in gardens. Miller.

FERNY. adj. [from fern.] Overgrown with fern.

The herd suffic'd, did late repair
To ferny heaths, and to their forest-lare. Dryden.

FEROCIOUS. adj. [ferox, Latin; feroce, French.]

1. Savage; fierce.

Smedley rose in majesty of mud;
Shaking the horrors of his ample brows,
And each ferocious feature grim with ooze. Pope.

2. Ravenous; rapacious.

The hare, that becometh a prey unto man, unto beasts and fowls of the air, is fruitful even unto superfecundation; but the lion and ferocious animal hath young ones but seldom, and but one at a time. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FEROCITY. n. f. [ferocitas, Latin; ferocité, French; from ferocious.] Savageness; wildness; fierceness.

An uncommon ferocity in my countenance, with the remarkable flatness of my nose, and extent of my mouth, have procured me the name of lion. Addison's Guardian.

Untaught, uncultivated, as they were Inhospitable, full of ferocity. Philips's Britain.

FERREROUS. adj. [ferrus, Latin.] Irony; partaking of iron.

In the body of glass there is no ferrerous or magnetical nature. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

FERRET. n. f. [fured, Welsh; furet, French; ferret, Dutch; viserra, Lat.]

1. A kind of rat with red eyes and a long snout, used to catch rabbits. They are said to have been brought hither from Africa.

With what an eager earnestness she looked,

Shaw's Grammar.

TO FERULE. v. a. To chastise with the ferula.

FERVOUR. n. f. [fervor, Latin; ferveur, French.]

1. Heat; warmth.

Were it an undeniable truth that an effectual ferveur proceeded from this star, yet would not the same determine the opinion. Brown.

Like bright Aurora, whose resplendent ray
 Foretells the ferveur of ensuing day,
 And warns the shepherd with his flocks retreat
 To leafy shadows, from the threaten'd heat. Waller.

These silver drops, like morning dew,
 Foretell the ferveur of the day;
 So from one cloud soft show'rs we view,
 And blissing lightnings burst away. Pope.

2. Heat of mind; zeal.

Odious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason so great as might in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of rash proceedings, if in ferveur of zeal they had removed such things. Hooker.

Haply despair hath seiz'd her;
 Or, wing'd with ferveur of her love, she's flown
 To her belov'd Posthumus. Shakespeare's Cymb.

 on the inside to signify some letter, when any of them is pointed at by the fore-finger of the right hand, or by any kind of ferveur. Hooker.

Teach them how manly passions ought to move;
 For such as cannot think, can never live;
 And since they needs will judge the poet's art,
 Point 'em with ferveurs to each shining part. Dryden.

FERSELS. n. f. A kind of base grain.

Disdain not fersels or poor vetch to sow,
 Or care to make Egyptian lentils thrive. May's Virgil.

FESSE. n. f. [In heraldry.]

The fesse is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing the third part of the es-cutcheon over the middle: if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you must name the field, and say so many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say bar-wike, or barry of six, eight, or ten; as the king of Hungary bears argent and gules, barry of eight. Peachment.

TO FESTER. v. n. [fesse, in Bavarian, a swelling corrupted, junius.] To rankle;
 to corrupt; to grow virulent.

 the fere which had deeply festered within me. Sidney.

Inward corruption and infected sin,
 Not purg'd, not heal'd, behind remained still,
 And festering sore did rankle yet within. F. Queen.
 How should our festered sores be cured? Hooker.
 I have some wounds upon me, and they smart,
 To hear themselves remember'd.
 —Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
 And tent themselves with death. Shakespeare.

Mind that their souls
 May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
 From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies

Must lie and fester. Shakespeare's Henry v.
 There was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some good degree of favour, and Felton, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be festering in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect. Horson.

Passion and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery that makes it fester. South.

FESTINATE. adj. [festinatus, Latin.]

Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope.
Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.
The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character. Berkley to Pope.
2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.
To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this.
Hooker.
So having said, he thus to Eve in few:
Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done?
Milton.
Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge. Dryd.
The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope.
- FE'WEL. n. f. [few, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.
If a spark of error have thus far prevailed falling even where the wood was green, and farther off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the guilt thereof be greater in

FIB

- men, whose minds are as dry fevel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions and broils?
Hooker, Dedication.
- Others may give the fewel or the fire!
But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Denham.
- A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it.
Bantley's Sermons.
- To FE'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.
Never, alas! the dreadful name,
That fewels the infernal flame. Cowley.
- FE'WNES. n. f. [from few.]
1. Paucity; smallness of number.
These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers with whom they are embodied. Dryden.
 2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.
Fewness and truth, 'tis thus. Shakespeare.
- To FEY. v. a. [veghen, Dutch.] To cleanse
a ditch of mud.
Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
That all a dry summer no water will yield,
By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tupper.
- FIB. n. f. [A cant word among children.]
A lie; a falsehood.
Destroy his fib or sophistry in vain,
The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope.
I so often lie,
Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I.
Pope.
- To FIB. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie;
to tell lies; to speak falsely.
If you have any mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me. Arbutnot.
- FIBBER. n. f. [from fib.] A teller of *fib*s.
- FIBRE. n. f. [fiore, French; fibra, Lat.]
1. A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.
Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.
 2. A fiore, in physick, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastick; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived;
and others so big as to be plainly seen;
and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves,
veins, arteries, and muscles. Quincy.
My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every sticken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life:
The name of father awes me still. Dryden.
- FIBRIL. n. f. [fibrille, French.] A small fibre or string.
The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells.
Chyne's Phil. Princ.
- FIBROUS. adj. [fioreux, French; from fiore.] Composed of fibres or stamina.
The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a graininess of moisture.
Bacon's Natural History.
I saw Petrus' arms employed around
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;

FIC

- This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous hands,
The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryd.
The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbutnot.
- FIBULA. n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg;
and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.
- FICKLE. adj. [ficcol, Saxon.]
1. Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; change-ful; without steady adherence.
Remember where we are,
In France amongst a fickle wavering nation.
Shakespeare's Henry vi.
A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milton.
They know how fickle common lovers are;
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.
Dryden.
 2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.
We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
Who change the constant lover for the new. Prior.
- He would be loth
Us to abolish; lest the adversary
Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
Most favours! Milton's Paradise Lost.
- FICKLINESS. n. f. [from fickle.] Incon-stancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.
Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fester his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baech of whom the complained. Sidney.
Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
In choice and change of thy dear loved dame.
Fairy Queen.
I am a soldier and unspt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shakespeare.
Instability of temper ought to be checked,
when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences.
Addison's Freeholder.
Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell,
I found that what she liked one day she disliked another. Addison.
- FIC'ELY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.
Do not now,
Like a young wretched heir, mortgage the hopes
Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
To raise a present power that's fickly held By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.
- FICO. n. f. [Italian.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig
for you.
Having once recovered his fortrefs, he then gives the fig to his adversaries. Carew.
- FICTILE. adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.
The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon's Natural History.
- FICTION. n. f. [fictio, Latin; fision, Fr.]
1. The act of feigning or inventing.
If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fision of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it?
Sidney's Quest.

Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fiction.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. The thing feigned or invented.

If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poets' fictions;
If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
While that my soul, she lives in afflictions.

Sidney.

So also was the fiction of those golden apples Kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Eve.

Raleigh.

3. A falsehood; a lie.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.

With fancy'd rules and arbitrary laws
Matter and motion man restrains,
And studied lines and fictitious circles draws.

Prior.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictivus, Latin.]

1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.

Draw him strictly so,
That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame.

Dryden.

2. Feigned; imaginary.

The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty.

Pope.

3. Not real; not true; allegorical; made by prolepsis.

Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory.

Addison.

FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [from fictitious.] Falsely; counterfeitedly.

These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature.

Dryden's Vulgar Errors.

FID. n. f. [fida, Italian.] A pointed iron with which seamen untwist their cords.

Skinner.

FIDDLE. n. f. [fidela, Saxon; vedel, Dutch; fideli, German; fidicula, Latin; fiel, Erie.] A stringed instrument of musick; a violin.

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer. Stillingfleet.
The adventure of the bear and fiddle,
Is sung; but breaks off in the middle. Hudibras.
She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings; but could not,
for her heart, find whereabout the tune lay.

Addison's Guardian.

To FIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play upon a fiddle.

Themistocles being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city.

Bacon's Essays.

Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senators dance.

Pope.

2. To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together.

Arbuthnot.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent,
and little done.

Swift.

FIDDLEFADDLE. n. f. [A cant word.] Trifles.

She said that her grandfather had a horse shot at Edgchill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature.

Spectator.

FIDDLEFADDLE. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.

She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her.

Arbuthnot.

FIDDLER. n. f. [from fiddle.] A musician; one that plays upon the fiddle.

Let no saucy fiddler presume to intrude,
Unless he is sent for to vary our blis. B. Jonson.
Nero put the fiddlers to death, for being more skilful in the trade than he was.

Taylor.

These will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politicks to jests,
To be repeated like John Dory,
When fiddlers sing at sea.

Dryden.

When misis delights in her spinner,
A fiddler may a fortune get.

Swift.

FIDDLESTICK. n. f. [fiddle and stick.] The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.

His grisly beard was long and thick,
With which he thrung his fiddlestick.

Hudibras.

FIDLESTRING. n. f. [fiddle and string.] The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.

A fiddlestring, moistened with water, will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth.

Arbuthnot.

FIDELITY. n. f. [fideltas, Latin; fidelté, French.]

1. Honesty; veracity.

The church, by her publick reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is fidelity.

Hooker.

2. Faithful adherence.

They mistake credulity for fidelity.

Clarke.

To FIDGE. } v. n. [A cant word.] To
To FIDGET. } move nimbly and irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation.

Tim, thou'rt the Punch to stir up trouble;
You wriggle, fidge, and make a rout,
Put all your brother puppets out.

Swift.

FIDUCIAL. adj. [fiducia, Latin.] Confident; undoubting.

Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the commands.

Hammond's Pract. Catech.

FIDUCIARY. n. f. [fiduciarius, Latin.]

1. One who holds any thing in trust.

2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary,
that faith is the only instrument of his justification;
and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it.

Hammond.

FIDUCIARY. adj.

1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.

That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary assent to whatever the gospel has revealed.

Wake.

2. Not to be doubted.

Eliziana can rely no where upon mere love and fiduciary obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience.

Houel.

FIEF. n. f. [feif, French.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superiour.

To the next realm the stretch'd her sway,
For painture near adjoining lay,
A plenteous province and alluring prey;
A chamber of dependencies was fram'd,
And the whole feif, in right of poetry, she claim'd.

Dryden.

As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were in the nature of feifs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at sea.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

FIELD. n. f. [feld, Saxon; feld, German; weld, Dutch.]

1. Ground not inhabited; not built on.

Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasure prove,
That hills and valleys, dale and field,
And all the craggy mountains yield.

Raleigh.

By the civil law the corpse of persons deceased were buried out of the city in the fields.

Ayliffe.

2. Ground not enclosed.

Field lands are not exempted from malloes, nor yet from imut, where it is more than in inclosed lands.

Moetimer.

3. Cultivated tract of ground.

Or great Ofliris, who first taught the swain
In Phasian fields to sow the golden grain.

Pope.

4. The open country: opposed to house or quarters.

Since his majesty went into the field,
I have seen her rise from her bed.

Shakspeare.

5. The ground of battle.

When a man is in the field, a moderate skill in fencing rather exposes him to the sword of his enemy, than secures him from it.

Locke.

6. A battle; a campaign; the action of an army while it keeps the field.

You maintain several factions;
And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,

You are disputing of your generals. Shakspeare.
What though the field be lost,
All is not lost.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

7. A wide expanse.

The god a clearer space for heav'n design'd;
Where fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.

Dryden.

Ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove.

Pope.

8. Space; compass; extent.

The ill-natured man gives himself a large field to expatiate in: he exposes failings in human nature.

Addison's Spectator.

I should enter upon a field too wide, and too much beaten, if I should display all the advantages of peace.

Smalridge.

Who can this field of miracles survey,
And not with Galen all in rapture lay,
Behold a God, adore him and obey.

Blackmore.

9. The ground or blank space on which figures are drawn.

Let the field or ground of the picture be clear, light, and well united with colour.

Dryden.

10. [In heraldry.] The surface of a shield.

FIELDED. adj. [from field.] Being in field of battle.

Now, Mars, I prythee, make us quick in work;

That we with smoking swords may march from hence,

To help our fielded friends.

Shakspeare.

FIELD-BASIL. n. f. [field and basil.] A plant.

FIELDBED. n. f. [field and bed.] A bed contrived to be set up easily in the field.

Romeo, good night; I'll to my trucklebed,
This fieldded is too cold for me to sleep.

Shakspeare.

FIELDFARE. n. f. [feld and papan, to wander in the fields; turdus pilaris.] A bird.

Winter birds, as woodcocks and fieldfares, if they come early out of the northern countries, with us these cold winters.

Bacon.

FIELDMARSHAL. n. f. [field and marshal.] Commander of an army in the field.

FIELDMOUSE. n. f. [field and mouse; micetulus.] A mouse that burrows in banks, and makes her house with various apartments.

The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground. Dryden.

Fieldmice are apt to know their roots, and kill them in hard winters. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FIELDOFFICER. n. f. [field and officer.] An officer whose command in the field extends to a whole regiment: as the colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major.

FIELDPIECE. adj. [field and piece.] Small cannon used in battles, but not in sieges. The bassa planting his fieldpieces upon the hills, did from thence grievously annoy the defendants. Amiles.

FIEND. n. f. [fiend, fiomb, Saxon, a foe.]

1. An enemy; the great enemy of mankind; the devil.

Tom is followed by the foul fiend. Shaksp.

2. Any infernal being.

What now, had I a body again, I could, Coming from hell; what fiends would wish should be, And Hannibal could not have wish'd to see.

Ben Jonson Catiline.

The hell-hounds, as ungurg'd with flesh and blood,

Pursue their prey, and seek their wonted food;

The fiend remounts his courser. Dryden.

O woman! woman! when to ill thy mind

Is bent, all hell contains no fouler fiend. Pope.

FIERCE. adj. [fier, Fr. ferox, Lat.]

1. Savage; ravenous; easily enraged.

Thou huntest me as a fierce lion. Job.

2. Vehement in rage; eager of mischief.

Destruction enters in the treacherous wood,

And vengeful slaughter, fiercer for human blood.

Pope.

Tyrants fierce, that unrelenting die.

With that the god, whose earthquakes rock the ground,

Fierce to Phœcia cross the vast profound. Pope.

3. Violent; outrageous; vehement.

Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel. Genesis.

4. Passionate; angry; furious.

This fierce abridgment

Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in. Shaksp.

A man brings his mind to be positive and fierce for positions whose evidence he has never examined. Locke.

5. Strong; forcible; violent; with celebrity.

The ships, though so great, are driven of fierce winds; yet are they turned about with a very small helm. James.

FIERCELY. adv. [from fierce.] Violently; furiously.

Battle join'd, and both sides fiercely fought.

Shaksp.

The defendants, fiercely assailed by their enemies before, and beaten with the great ordnance behind, were grievously distressed. Knotter.

The air, if very cold, imitates the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon.

FIERCENESS. n. f. [from fierce.]

1. Ferocity; savageness.

The defect of heat which gives fierceness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language. Swift.

2. Eagerness for blood; fury.

Suddenly there came out of a wood a monstrous lion, with a she-bear not far from him, of little less fierceness. Sidney.

3. Quickness to attack; keenness in anger and repentment.

The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their strength,

Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant. Shaksp.

4. Violence; outrageous passion.

His pride and brutal fierceness I abhor;

But scorn your mean suspicions of me more.

Dryden's Aureng.

5. Vehemence; hasty force.

FIERIPACIAS. n. f. [In law.] A judicial writ, that lies at all times within the year and days, for him that has recovered in an action of debt or damages, to the sheriff, to command him to levy the debt, or the damages of his goods, against whom the recovery was had.

Cowell.

FIERINESS. n. f. [from fier.]

1. Hot qualities; heat; acrimony.

The ashes, by their heat, their fieriness, and their dryness, belong to the element of earth.

Boyle.

2. Heat of temper; intellectual ardour.

The Italians, notwithstanding their natural fieriness of temper, affect always to appear sober and sedate. Addison.

FIERY. adj. [from fire.]

1. Consisting of fire.

Scarcely had Phœbus in the gloomy East

Yet harnessed his fiery footed team,

No rear'd above the earth his flaming crest,

When the last deadly smook aloft did steam.

Fairy Queen.

I know thou'd'st rather

Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulph

Than flatter him in a bowel. Shaksp.

2. Hot like fire.

Hath thy fiery heart so parcht thy entrails,

That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?

Shaksp.

3. Vehement; ardent; active.

Then fiery expedition be my wing,

Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king. Shaksp.

I drew this gallant lead of war,

And cul'd these fiery spirits from the world,

To outlook conquest, and to win renown

Ev'n in the jaws of danger and of death. Shaksp.

4. Passionate; outrageous; easily provoked.

You know the fiery quality of the duke;

How unremoveable, and fixt is he

In his own course. Shaksp.

5. Unrestrained; fierce.

Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,

Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,

Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,

With slow but stately pace kept on his course.

Shaksp.

Through Ellis and the Grecian towns he flew;

Th' audacious wretch four fiery couriers drew.

Dryden.

6. Heated by fire.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut, by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooten.

See! from the brake the whirling pheasant springs,

And mounts exulting on triumphant wings:

Short is his joy; he feels the fiery wound,

Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground.

Pope.

FIFE. n. f. [ffire, Fr.] A pipe blown to the drum; military wind music.

Farewell the plumed troops, and the big war

That make ambition virtue! oh farewell!

Farewell the neighing steed and the shrill trump,

The spirit-rivelling drum, the ear-piercing fife.

Shaksp.

Thus the gay victim, with fresh garlands crown'd

Pleas'd with the sacred fife's enlivening sound,

Through gazing crowds in solemn state proceeds.

Philips.

FIFTEEN. adj. [fifteen, Saxon.] Five and ten.

I have dream'd and slept above some fifteen years and more. Shaksp.

FIFTEENTH. adj. [fifteenth, Saxon.]

The ordinal of fifteen; the fifth after the tenth; containing one part in fifteen.

A fifteenth part of silver incorporate with gold,

will not be recovered by any water of separation, except you put a greater quantity of silver to draw up the less. Baron's Natural History.

London sends but four burgeses to parliament,

although it bears the fifteenth part of the charge of the whole nation in all publick taxes and levies. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

FIFTH. adj. [fiftha, Saxon.]

1. The ordinal of five; the next to the fourth.

With smiling aspect you serenely move,

In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love.

Dryden.

Just as I wish'd the lots were cast on four,

Myself the fifth. Pope's Odyssey.

2. All the ordinals are taken elliptically for the part which they express; a fifth, a fifth part; a third, a third part.

The publick shall have lost four fifths of its annual income for ever. Swift.

FIFTHLY. adv. [from fifth.] In the fifth place.

Fifthly, living creatures have a more exact

FIFTIETH. adj. [fifteenth, Saxon.]

The ordinal of fifty.

If this medium be rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundred part of an inch from its body, and rarer

there than at the fiftieth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn,

I see no reason why the increase of density should stop any where. Newton's Opticks.

FIFTY. adj. [fiftig, Saxon.] Five tens.

A wither'd hermit, five score winters worn,

Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shaksp.

Judas ordained captains over thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens. Mac.

In the Hebrew there is a particle consisting but of one letter, of which there are reckoned up above fifty several significations. Locke.

FIG. n. f. [figus, Latin; figo, Spanish;

figue, French.]

1. A tree that bears figs.

The characters are: the flowers, which are always inclosed in the middle of the fruit, consist of the leaf, and are male and female: in the same fruit: the male flowers are situated towards the crown of the fruit; and the female, growing near the stalk, are succeeded by small hard seeds:

the intire fruit is, for the most part, turbinated and globular, or of an oval shape, is fleshy, and of a sweet taste. Miller.

Full on its crown a fig's green branches rise,

And shoot a leafy forest to the skies. Pope.

O! lead me through the mae,

Embowering endlefs of the Indian fig. Thomson.

2. A luscious soft fruit; the fruit of the fig-tree.

It maketh figs better, if a figtree, when it begineth to put forth leaves, have its top cut off.

Bacon's Natural History.

Figs are great subductors of acrimony. Arbuck.

TO FIG. v. a. [See Fico.]

war; to battle; to contend in arms.
It is used both of armies and single combatants.
King Henry, bethy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shak.
Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds
In ranks and squadrons, and right form of war.
Shakespeare.
The common question is, if we must now surrender Spain, what have we been fighting for all this while? the answer is ready: we have been fighting for the ruin of the publick interest, and the advancement of a private. Swift.
For her confederate nations fought, and kings were slain,
Troy was o'erthrown, and a whole empire fell.
Philips.
2. To combat; to duel; to contend in single fight.
One shall undertake to fight against another.
a Esdras.
The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
The young ones in her nest, against the owl.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.
3. To act as a soldier in any case.
Richard, that rubb'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave.
Shakespeare's King John.
Greatly unfortunate, he fights the cause
Of honour, virtue, liberty, and Rome. Addison.
4. It has with before the person opposed;
sometimes against.
Ye fight with the Chaldeans. Jeremiah.
The stars in their courses fought against Seta.
Judges.
5. To contend.
The hot and cold, the dry and humid fight.
Santys.
- To FIGHT. v. a. To war against; to combat against.
Himself alone an equal match he boasts,
To fight the Phrygian and th' Ausonian hosts.
Dryden's Æneid.
- FIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Battle.
Gabriel, lead forth to battle these my sons
Invincible, lead forth my armed saints,
By thousands and by millions rang'd for fight.
Milton.
2. Combat; duel.
Hercules in single fight I slew,
Whom with three lives Feruna did endure;
And thrice I sent him to the Stygian shore,
'Till the last ebbing soul return'd no more.
Dryden's Æneid.
3. Something to screen the combatants in ships.
Who ever saw a noble fight,
That never view'd a brave sea-fight?
Hang up your bloody colours in the air,
Up with your fights and your nettings prepare.
Dryden.
- FIGHTER. n. f. [from fight.] Warrior;
duellist.

FIG

- I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no fighter.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
- O, 'tis the coldest youth upon a charge,
The most deliberate fighter! Dryden.
- FIGHTING. participial adj. [from fight.]
1. Qualified for war; fit for battle.
A host of fighting men went out to war by hands. a Chronicles.
2. Occupied by war; being the scene of war.
In fighting fields as far the spear I throw
As flies the arrow from the well-drawn bow.
Pope.
- FIGMA'RIGOLD. n. f. A plant. It is succulent, and has the appearance of houfeleek: the leaves grow opposite by pairs. Miller.
- FIGMENT. n. f. [figmentum, Latin.] An invention; a fiction; the idea feigned.
Upon the like grounds was raised the figment of Briseus, who, dwelling in a city called Hecatonchiria, the fancies of those times assigned him an hundred iands. Brown.
Those assertions are in truth the figments of those idle brains that brought romances into church history. Bishop Lloyd.
It carries rather an appearance of figment and invention, in those that handed down the memory of it, than of truth and reality. Woodward.
- FIGPECKER. n. f. [fig and peck; ficedula,
Latin.] A bird.
- FIGULATE. adj. [from figulus, Lat.] Made of potters clay.
- FIGURABLE. adj. [from figuro, Lat.] Capable of being brought to certain form, and retained in it. Thus lead is figurable, but not water.
The differences of impressible and not impressible, figurable and not figurable, scissible and not scissible, are plebeian notions. Bacon.
- FIGURABILITY. n. f. [from figurable.] The quality of being capable of a certain and stable form.
- FIGURAL. adj. [from figura.]
1. Represented by delineation.
Incongruities have been committed by geographers in the figural resemblances of several regions. Brown.
2. FIGURAL Number. Such numbers as do or may represent some geometrical figure, in relation to which they are always considered, and are either lineary, superficial, or solid. Harris.
- FIGURATE. adj. [figuratus, Latin.]
1. Of a certain and determinate form.
Plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not; for look how far the spirit is able to spread and continue itself, so far goeth the shape or figure, and then is determined.
Bacon.
2. Resembling any thing of a determinate form: as, figurate stones retaining the forms of shells in which they were formed by the deluge.
3. FIGURATE Counterpoint. [In musick.]
That wherein there is a mixture of discords along with the concords. Harris.
4. FIGURATE Descant. [In musick.]
That wherein discords are concerned, as well, though not so much, as con-cords; and may well be termed the ornament or rhetorical part of musick, in regard that in this are introduced all the varieties of points, figures, synopses, diversities of measures, and whatever

- else is capable of adorning the composition. Harris.
- FIGURATION. n. f. [figuratus, Latin.]
1. Determination to a certain form.
Neither dith the wind, as far as it carrieth a voice, with motion thereof confound any of the delicate and articulate figurations of the air in variety of words. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. The act of giving a certain form.
If motion be in a certain order, there fol-loweth vivification and figuration in living creatures perfect. Bacon's Natural History.
- FIGURATIVE. adj. [figurativus, French,
from figura, Latin.]
1. Representing something else; typical;
representative.
This, they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; whereinto Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker.
2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning; not literal.
How often have we been railed at for understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot be literally understood without overthrowing the plainest evidence of sense and reason.
Stillington.
This is a figurative expression, where the words are used in a different sense from what they fignify in their first ordinary intention. Rogers.
3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical ex-ornations; full of changes from the original sense.
Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublimity and with the most figurative expressions.
Dryden's Juv. Pref.
- FIGURATIVELY. adv. [from figurative.]
By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.
The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.
The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uziah and Ezechias. Brown.
Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicate.
- FIGURE. n. f. [figura, Latin.]
1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.
Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks and gilliflowers, which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglaia, which have four leaves. Bacon.
Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases.
Boyle.
Figures are properly modifications of bodies;
for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.
2. Shape; form; semblance.
He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakespeare.
3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.
The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
Ere I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth. Dryden.
I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses.
Addison's Spectator.

A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either.

Clarissa.

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.

While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryd.

The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison's Spectator.

Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow.

Addison's Guardian.

Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.

Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Magnificence; splendour.

If it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that he may live in figure and indulgence, and be able to retire from business to idleness and burry, his trade, as to him, loses all its innocency. Lowe.

6. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

Several statues, which seemed at a distance of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in loam. Addison.

7. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.

In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the fineness of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryd.

My favourite books and pictures sell;
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger. Prior.

8. Arrangement; disposition; modification.

The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watts's Logick.

9. A character denoting a number.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets cannot

Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number
His love to Antony. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age. Bacon.

As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South's Sermons.

10. The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.

We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: she works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and daubery beyond our element. Shakspere.

He set a figure to discover

If you were fled to Rye or Dover. Hudibras.
Figure-fingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves. L'Estrange.

11. [In theology.] Type; representative.

Who was the figure of him that is to come. Romans.

12. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are confounded even by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shakspere.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bedow, must be understood only praying to pray. Stilling fleet.

They have been taught rhetoric, but never taught language; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

13. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FIGURE. v. a. [from figuro, Latin.]

1. To form into any determinate shape.

Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Bacon.

Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold. Dryden's Virgil.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance: as in picture or statuary.

Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,
That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser.

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,
O'er figur'd world now travels with his eye. Pope.

3. To cover or adorn with figures, or images.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shaksp.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,
Startle mine eyes, and make me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shaksp.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hooker.

There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shaksp.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff:
Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough

An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the ancients. Dryden.

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison.

6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare. Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshow.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;
In thus the heaven figures some event. Shaksp.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Locke.

9. To note by characters.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As thro' a crystal glass the figur'd hours are seen. Dryden.

A pretender to astrology and prediction.

Quacks, figure-flingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters cannot well live without it. Collier of Confidence.

FIGWORT. n. s. [fig and wort; ficaria.]

FILA'CROUS. adj. [from filum, Latin.]

Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

They make cables of the bark of lime trees: it is the stalk that maketh the filaceous matter commonly, and sometimes the down that groweth above. Bacon's Natural History.

FILACER. n. s. [filaxarius, low Lat.

filum.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties; they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Harris.

FILAMENT. n. s. [filament, French;

filamenta, Latin.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvium pushing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Brounne.

The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey on Consumptions.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray
On the next threads and filaments does bear,
Which form the springy texture of the air;
And those still strike the near, 'till to the light
The quick vibration propagates the light. Blackmore.

The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible. Arbuth.

FILBERT. n. s. [This is derived by Ju- nius and Skinner from the long beards or husks, as corrupted from full beard or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, hawberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkshoods of all colours. Bacon's Essays.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!
On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?
Yet in a filbert I have often known Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone. Darset.

There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.

To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Speiser.

The champion robbeth by night,
And groweth and filcheth by day. Tusser.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he that files from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakespeare.
He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drones. Burton on Melancholy.

What made thee venture to betray,
And filch the lady's heart away. Rudibras.
The pismire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods. L'Estrange.

Fain would they filch that little food away,
While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey. Dryden.

So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care. Gay.

FILCHER. n. f. [from filch.] A thief;
a petty robber.

FILLE. n. f. [file, French; filum, a thread,
Latin.]

1. A thread. Not used.

But let me resume the file of my narration, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted. Watson.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file. Bacon.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those,
and then rank them into several files, according to the subject matters. Bacon.

Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind;
From files a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryden.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.

Our present matters grow upon the file
To five and twenty thousand men of choice. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

The valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn
Upon a tawny front. Shakespeare.

So saying, on he led his radiant files,
Dazzling the moon. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. [peol, Saxon; vijle, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging:
the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made: and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Maxon.

A file for the mattocks and for the coulters.

The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,
Files in their bands, and hammers at their side. Dryden.

FILCUTTER. n. f. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Gad-steel is a tough sort of steel: filecutters use it to make their chisels, with which they cut their files. Maxon.

TO FILE. v. a. [from filum, a thread.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire.
Whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. [from peolan, Saxon.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hooker.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blemish by *fil*ing or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Ray.

3. To smooth; to polish.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory,
his tongue fil'd, and his eye ambitious. Shaksp.

4. [from filan, Saxon.] To foul; to fully; to pollute. This sense is retained in Scotland.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd. Shakespeare.

His weeds divinely fashioned,
All fil'd and mangl'd. Chapman's Iliad.

TO FILZ. v. a. [from the noun.] To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony, 'till we drew up in good order, and fil'd off. Trotter.
Did all the grosser atoms at the cell
Of chance file off to form the pondrous ball,
And undetermin'd into order fall? Blackmore.

FILMOT. n. f. [corrupted from feuille
morle, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow-brown colour.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filment, turned up with red. Swift.

FILER. n. f. [from file.] One who files;
one who uses the file in cutting metals.

FILIAL. adj. [filial-le, French; filius,
Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for in great a merit. Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith. Milton.

He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought. Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answer'd spoke. Milton.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;
And when the parent rock decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds arise. Prior.

FILIA'TION. n. f. [from filius, Latin.]

The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal. Hale.

FILINGS. n. f. [without a singular; from file.] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any opperose. Broown.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Filmon on the Claphicks.

TO FILL. v. a. [pyllan, Saxon.]

1. To store till no more can be admitted.

Fill the waterpots with water, and they fill'd them up to the brim. John.

I am who fill
Infinite, nor vacuous space. Milton.

The celestial quires, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld;
Birth-day of heav'n and earth; with joy and shout
The hollow universal orb they fill'd. Milton.

2. To store abundantly.

Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
And lakes and running streams the waters fill. Milton.

3. To satisfy; to content.

He with his comforted Eve
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse to hear. Milton.
Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and superabundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings. Chenyn's Phil. Princ.

4. To glut; to surfeit.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools. Shakespeare.

5. TO FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. TO FILL out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him
Whom pomp and greatness fits to loose about,
That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. TO FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. TO FILL up. To supply.

When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the under-work of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. TO FILL up. To occupy by bulk.

There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. TO FILL up. To engage; to employ.

Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO FILL. v. n.

1. To give to drink.

In the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double. Revelations.

We fill to th' general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss. Shakespeare.

2. To grow full.

3. To glut; to satiate.

Things that are sweet and fat are more filling, and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily. Bacon.

4. TO FILL up. To grow full.

Neither the Palus Meotis nor the Euxine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shall-lower. Woodward.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation;
and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization. Sharp.

FILL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.

Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
That eye thereof her babes may suck their fill. Fairy Queen.

But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,
Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war. Fairfax.

When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock, and waters flowed out to your fill? 2 Esdras.
Mean while enjoy

Your fill, what happiest this happy state
Can comprehend, incapable of more. Milton.

Amid' the tree now got, where plenty hung
Tempting to nigh, to pluck and eat my fill,
I spaid not. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Which made me gently first remove your fears,
That to you might have room to entertain
Your fill of joy. Denham's Sophy.
Your barbarity may have its fill of destruction. Pope.

This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber. Mortimer.

FILLER. n. f. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.

'Tis a meer filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil. Dryden's Æneid, Dedication.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They have six diggers to four fillers, so as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer.

FILLET. n. f. [filet, French; filum, Latin.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs. Dryden's Æneid.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:
These morsels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillers for the feast. Dryden.

3. Meat rolled together and tied round.

Filler of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakespeare.
The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

2. To adorn with an allragal.

He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapiters, and filleted them. Exodus.

To FILLIP. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.]

To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.

If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Flip the stars: then let the mutinous winds Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

We see, that if you fillip a lute-string, it sheweth double or treble. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FILLIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.

FILLY. n. f. [filey, Welsh; file, French.]

1. A young horse or mare. Not now used.

Geld fillies, but tits, yet a nine days of age,
They die else of gelding, and gelders do rage:
Young fillies so likely of bulk and of bone,
Keep such to be breeders, let gelding alone. Tusser.

A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.

2. A young mare: opposed to a colt or young horse.

I jelt to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a far and bean-fed horse beguile, Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shakespeare.

I am joined in wedlock, for my sins, to one of those fillies who are defecated in the old poet. Addison's Spectator.

FILM. n. f. [filme, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.

While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle. Bacon.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight had bred. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it. Graunt.

There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of fight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope.

To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whole filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft, to exultate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Philips.

Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glittering textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the dyes,
When light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.

To FILTER. v. a. [filro, low Latin; per filum trahere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.

2. To strain; to percolate.

Dilute this liquor with fair water, filter it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Grew.

FILTER. n. f. [filtrum, Latin.]

1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel, so that the liquor drops from it.

2. A strainer; a scearce.

That the water passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.

FILTH. n. f. [filð, Saxon.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filth's favour but themselves. Shakespeare.

Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet;
for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Nat. History.

How perfect then is man? from head to foot
Detail'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys.

Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sapience,
To spare the folks that give him his pence. Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

FILTHILY. adv. [from filthily.] Nastily; foully; grossly.

It stuck filthily in camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

FILTHINESS. n. f. [from filthily.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue suppressed it, left their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. Smith.

FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakespeare.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epic poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Dunciad.

To FILTERATE. v. a. [from filter.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.

The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbutnot.

FILTRATION. n. f. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear.

The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.

We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FIMBLE Hemp. n. f. [corrupted from female.]

The light summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called female hemp. Mortimer.

Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,

In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, and serve at a need,
The fumble to spin, and the carle for beg need. Tusser.

FIN. n. f. [fin, Saxon; vin, Dutch.]

The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.

He that depends Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare.

Their fins consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. Mars.

Thus at half-ebb a rising sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watery herd, astonished at the roar,

Rest on their fin awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way,
Dryden.

Still at his oar th' industrious Libby plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin.
Addison.

FIN-FOOTED. adj. [fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like hippedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latirostous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet.

FINABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine; that deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable.
Bacon.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable.

The last, the meanest of your sons inspire. Pope.

10. The passion of love.

Love various hearts does variously inspire,
It stirs in gentle bosoms gentle fire,
Like that of incense on the altar laid;
But raging flames tempestuous souls invade;
A fire which every windy passion blows,
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.
Dryden.

The fire of love in youthful blood,
Like what is kindled in brush-wood,
But for a moment burns. Shadwell.

The god of love retires;
Dim are his torches, and extinct his fires. Pope.

New charms shall still increase desire,
And time's swift wing shall fan the fire.
Mowbray's Fables.

11. Eruption or imposthumation: as, St. Anthony's fire.

His first-begot, we know; and fore have felt,
When his fierce thunder drove us to the deep.

FIRST-BORN. n. f. [from first and born.] Eldest; the first by the order of nativity.

Last, with one midnight stroke, all the first-born

Of Egypt must lie dead. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Hail, holy light, offspring of heav'n first-born!

The first-born has not a sole or peculiar right, by any law of God and nature; the younger children having an equal title with him. Locke.

FIRST-FRUITS. n. f. [from first and fruits.]1. What the season earliest produces or matures of any kind.

A weary reaper from his tillage brought
First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf.

The blooming hopes of my then very young patron have been confirmed by most noble firstfruits, and his life is going on towards a plentiful harvest of all accumulated virtues. Prior.

2. The first profits of any thing.

Although the king loved to employ and advance bishops, because, having rich bishopricks, they carried their reward upon themselves; yet he did use to raise them by steps, that he might not lose the profit of the first-fruits, which by that course of gradation was multiplied. Bacon.

3. The earliest effect of any thing.

See, father, what first-fruits on earth are sprung,

From thy implanted grace in man! Milton.

FIRSTLING. adj. [from first.] That is is used collectively for the race of fishes.

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males subject. Shakespeare.

And now the fish ignoble fates escape,
Since Venus ow'd her safety to their shape. Creech.

There are fishes, that have wings, that are not strangers to the airy region: and there are some birds that are inhabitants of the water, whose blood is as cold as fishes; and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish-days. Locke.

2. The flesh of fish, opposed to that of terrestrial animals, by way of eminence called flesh.

I fight when I cannot chuse, and I eat no fish.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
We mortify ourselves with the diet of fish, and think we fare coarsely if we abstain from the flesh of other animals. Brown.

Fish-ponds are no small improvement of watry boggy lands. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Fish-ponds were made where former forests grew,

And hills were levell'd to extend the view. Prior.

After the great value the Romans put upon fishes, it will not appear incredible that C. Hirrius should sell his fish-ponds for quadrages
H. S. 32, 291 l. 13 s. 4 d. Arbuthnot.

FISHER. n. f. [from fish.] One who is employed in catching fish.

In our fight the three were taken up,
By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought:
At length another seiz'd on us,
And would have rest the fishes of their prey,
Had not they been very slow of sail. Shakespeare

We know that town is but with fishes taught,
Where Theseus govern'd and where Plato taught.

Left he should suspect it, draw it from him,
As fishes do the bait, to make him follow it.

A soldier now he with his coat appears;
A fisher now, his trembling angle bears. Pope

FISHERBOAT. n. f. [from fisher and boat.] A Poor befitting: 'twas a fi'tment for

The purpose I then follow'd. Shakspeare.

Fi'TNESS. n. f. [from fit.]

1. Propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.

In things the fi'tness whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgment of antiquity, concurring with that which is received, may induce them to think it not unfit. Hunter.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fi'tness
That we adjourn this court. Shakspeare Henry VIII.

Wer't my fi'tness
To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones. Shakspeare King Lear.

2. Convenience; commodity; the state of being fit.

Nor time nor place
Did then cohere, and yet you would make both:
They've made themselves, and that their fi'tness.
now

Your kindness banishes your fear,
Resolv'd to fix for ever here. Waller.

3. To lose volatility, so as to be malleable.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quick-silver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more,
and endure the hammer. Bacon's Natural History.

FIXATION. n. f. [French.]

1. Stability; firmness; steadiness.

Your fixation in matters of religion will not be more necessary for your soul's than your kingdom's peace. King Charles.

2. Residence in a certain place.

To light, created in the first day, God gave no proper place or fixation. Raleigh.

3. Confinement; forbearance of excursion.

They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects. Watts.

4. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.

Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed; the colour, the fragility or plantness, and the volatility or fixation, compared with the simple bodies. Bacon.

It is more difficult to make gold of other metals less ponderous and less material, than to make silver of lead or quicksilver, both which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any condensation. Bacon.

5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.

Salt dissolved upon a fixation returns to its affected cubes. Glaucvill.

Fi'XEDLY. adv. [from fix'd.]

1. Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.

If we pretend that the distinction of species, or sorts, is fix'dly established by the real and secret constitutions of things. Locke.

2. Steadfastly.

Omnipotency, omniscency, and infinite goodness enlarge the spirit while it fix'dly looks on them. Burnet.

Fi'XEDNESS. n. f. [from fix'd.]

1. Stability; firmness.

2. Want or loss of volatility.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire un-consumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea signified by the word gold. Locke.

3. Solidity; coherence of parts.

Fluid or solid comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentley.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.

A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations. K. Charles.

Fi'XIDITY. n. f. [from fix'd.] Coherence of parts, oppos'd to volatility. A word of Boyle.

Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to the fixidity and volatility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them. Boyle.

Fi'XITY. n. f. [fixité, French.] Coherence of parts, oppos'd to volatility.

And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is conserved by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and reaction between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from burning away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them? Newton's Opticks.

Fi'XTURE. n. f. [from fix.]

1. Position.

The fixture of her eye hath motion in 't,
As we were mock'd with art. Shakspeare.

2. Stable pressure.

The firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait. Shakspeare.

3. Firmness; stable state.

Fights, changes, horrors,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their fixture. Shakspeare.

poon with which seamen strike fish.

Can'st thou with fixgigs pierce him to the quick,
Or in his skull thy harbed trident sick? Sandys.

FLA'BBY. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Soft;

not firm; easily shaking or yielding to the touch.

Paleness, a weak pulse, palpitations of the heart, flabby and black flesh, are symptoms of weak fibres. Arbuthnot.

Pulls out the rags contriv'd to prop
Her flabby dugs, and down they drop. Swift.

FLA'BLE. adj. [flabilis, Latin.] Blown about by the wind; subject to be blown.

FLA'CCID. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Weak; limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be is, that the part against which the sun beareth, waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.

They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unable to pronounce the letter r. Holder.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce fungules, or as they harden and produce callousities. Arbuth.

FLA'CCIDITY. n. f. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with insensibility. Wigman's Surgery.

To FLAG. v. n. [flaggeren, Dutch;
pleoğan, Saxon, to fly.]

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together. Abbot

The jades

That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their dowry, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead men's graves. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl.
Boyle's Spring of the Air.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,
The promise of a storm; the drifting gales
Forake by fits, and bill the flagging sails. Dryden.

3. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along
As if she were a body in a body:
My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches.
Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood:
for if the words be but becoming and signifying,
and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good. Ben Jonson
His stomach will want victuals at the usual hour, either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite. Locke.

Fame, when it is once at a stand, naturally flags and languishes. Addison's Spectator.
If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
My love above the starry vault I raise,
Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
I flag, I dump, and flutter in the dust. Ar'uth
He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches 'till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel intruders from the spleen. Swift.

To FLAG. v. a.

1. To let fall into feebleness; to suffer to droop.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
As well as Cupid, time is blind:
Soon must those glories of thy face
The fate of vulgar beauty find:
The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die.
Prior.

2. [from flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor were all flagged with excellent marble. Sensys.
A white stone used for flagging floors.
Woodward on Effigies.

FLAG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A water plant with a bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.

She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flag by the river's brink. Exodus.
Can bulrushes but by the river grow?
Can flag there flourish where no waters flow?
Sandys.

There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flag or stones. Walton's Angler.
Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land-forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endamagement.
Shakspeare's King John.

He hangs out as many flags as he desireth villains; square, if ships; if gallees, pendants.

Sandys' Travels.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than where there are ships of nobles: for if men's eyes are upon the priuities, it is for the business sake as fittely, and not for flags of pedigree. Bacon.

Let him be girt

With all the grisly legion that troop
Under the footy flag of Acheton, Hippas and hydra, or all the monstrous forms
'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,
And force him to reimburse his purchase back,
O. drag him by the curls to a foul death. Milton.

The French and Spaniards, when your flag appear,

Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.
The interpretation of that article about the flag,
is a ground of pleasure for opening a war. Temple.

In either's flag the golden serpents bear,
Ereeling crests alike, like volumes rear,
And mingle friendly hissings in the air. Dryden.

Then they, whose mothers, frantic with their fear,

In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,
And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair. Dryd.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements. [flache, old French.]

Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward on Effigies.

Flagstone will not split, as slate does, being sound formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata. Woodward

FLAG-BROOM. n. f. [from flag and broom.]

A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs, or of the leaves of the dwarf palm, imported from Spain.

The ship in which the commander of a fleet is.

FLAG-WORM. n. f. [flag and worm.]

A grub bred in watery places among flags or sedge.

He will in the three hot months bite at a flag- worm, or a green gentle. Walton's Angler.

FLAGELET. n. f. [flageolet, French.]

A small flute; a small instrument of wind music.

Play us a lesson on your flagelet. More.

FLAGELLA'TION. n. f. [from flagello, Latin.]

The use of the scourge.
By Bridewell all descend,

As morning pray'r and flagellation end. Garth.

FLAGGINESS. n. f. [from flaggy.]

Laxity; limberness; want of tension.

FLAGGY. adj. [from flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings when forth he did display,
Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way.
Fairy Queen.

That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry.
Dryden's Virgil.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a cole-wort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple.
Bacon's Natural History.

FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitius, Latin.]

1. Wicked; villainous; atrocious.

No villainy or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found, that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. Smith.

There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline.

L'Estrange.

First, those flagitious times,
Pregnant with unknown crimes,
Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Roscommon.

Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Adison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times. Pope.

2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, sad out-cast of each church and state,
And, harder still, flagitious yet not great. Pope.

FLAG'ITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from flagitious.]

Wickedness; villany.

FLA'GON. n. f. [flaccid, Welsh; flaxe,

Saxon; flage, Danish; flacon, French;
flasco, Italian; flasco, Spanish.] A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

More had sent him by a sutor in chancery two silver flagons. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Did they coin pipstots, bowls, and flagons
Int' officers of hose and deacons? Hudibras.

His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,
Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think

They either change, or stint him in his drink.
Dryden's Juvenal.

FLA'GRANCY. n. f. [flagrantia, Latin.]

Burning; heat; fire.

Let caution a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts. Bacon.

FLA'GRANT. adj. [flagrans, Latin.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager. It is always used figuratively.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sappho, at her toilet's greasy task,
Then issuing flagrant to an evening mask:
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beetle's lash still flagrant on their back.
Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming into notice.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation. Swift.

With equal poize let stoddy justice sway,
And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;
But, 'till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay.
Smith.

FLAGRA'TION. n. f. [flagro, Latin.]

Burning.

FLA'GSTAFF. n. f. [flag and staff.]

The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,
On wings of all the winds to combat flies:
His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,
And bloody crosses on his flagstaffs rise. Dryden.

FLAIL. n. f. [flagellum, Latin; fligel,

German.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear; the tool of the thrasher.

Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fell gently down as if they struck their friends.
Shakspeare's Henry vi.

FLA

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail had thresh'd the corn,
That ten-day labourers could not end. Milton.
In this pile shall reign a mighty prince,
Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense.

Dryden.
The dextrous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms and government. Locke.

The thrasher, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;

The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.

FLAKE. n. f. [flocus, Latin.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles, like red flakes in the element,
when the weather is hottest. Sidney.

And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almost made afraid'd.

Fairy Queen.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burnet.

Small drops of a misting rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow. Grew's Cosmology.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison.

2. A stratum; layer; film; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,
As not to be divorced by a wound. Sanity.

The teeth cut away great flakes of the metal, till it received the perfect form the teeth would make. Maxon.

To FLEAK. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,
Mould the round hail, or flake the Beech snow.

To FLAKE. v. n. To break into laminae;
to part in loose bodies.

FLAKY. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east. Shak.
The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire.

Hence, when the snows in winter cease to weep,
And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,
The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in summer, and those banks disdain. Blackmore.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminae.

FLAM. n. f. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lie; an illusive pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old aruspicy and aug'ry. Hudibras.

'Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion. South.

What are most of the histories of the world but lies? Lyes immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South.

To FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lie. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flam'd,
To damn ourselves t' avoid being damn'd.

God is not to be flammed off with lyes, who knows exactly what thou can'st do, and what not. South.

FLA

FLAMBEAU. n. f. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. Addison's Guardian.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme,
French.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is to hot, as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame. Newton.

What flame, what lightning e'er
So quick an active force did bear! Cowley.

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him
now. Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest flame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:
In both our English genius is express'd,
Lofty and bold but negligently dress'd. Haller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire. Cowley.
Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love. Cowley.

No warning of th' approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came:
I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

To FLAME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shakespeare.

He fell flaming through th' ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition. Milton.

Hell all around
As one great furnace flam'd. Milton.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECOLOURED. adj. [flame and colour.] Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flamecoloured stockings. Shakespeare.

August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce and choleric aspect, in a flamecoloured garment. Peacham.

FLAMEN. n. f. [Latin.] A priest; one that officiates in solemn offices.

Then first the flamen tasted living food;
Next his grim idol smear'd with human blood.

FLAMMABILITY. n. f. [flamma, Latin.]
The quality of admitting to be set on fire, so as to blaze.

In the sulphur of bodies tonified, that is, the oily, fat, and unctuous parts, consist the principles of flammability. Brown.

FLAMMATION. n. f. [flammatio, Latin.]
The act of setting on flame.

White or crystalline arsenick, being artificial,
and sublimed with salt, will not endure flammation.

Latin.] Vomiting out flame. DiD.

FLAMY. adj. [from flame.]

1. Inflamed; burning; blazing.
My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes,
With flamy breaths do issue oft in sound. Sidney.

2. Having the nature of flame.
The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter;
and though airy and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will. Bacon.

FLANK. n. f. [flanc, French, according to Menage, from dayu; more probably from latus, Latin.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank. Peacham.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He said, and pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent:
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His costlier pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downward near his flank descends. Pope.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from their rampier in front, and from the galleys that lay at sea in flank.
Bacon's War with Spain.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such sort as he might take the flank of the enemy. Hayward.

To right and left the front Divided, and to either flank retir'd. Milton.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain.

To FLANK. v. a.

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side.

With sates averse against their king's command,
Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,
And flank the passage. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To secure on the side.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,
Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert
lay. Dryden.

FLANKER. n. f. [from flank.] A fortification jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and fore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire. Knuttes.

Like storms of hail the stones fell down from high,

Cast from the bulwarks, flankers, posts, and towers. Fairfax.

To FLANKER. v. a. [flanquer, French.]
To defend by lateral fortifications.

FLANNEL. n. f. [gwlanen, Welsh; from gwlan, wool, Davies.] A soft nappy stuff of wool.

FLAP. n. f. [læppe, Saxon.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air. Brown.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal by turning down the flap. Sherr.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. A disease in horses.

When a horse has the flap, you may perceive his lips swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg: cut some flashes with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure. Farrier's Dict.

To FLAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle: the eagle flaps off the former, and devoured the other. L'Estrange.
Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings. Pope.

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

With fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions off, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound. Philips.
Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;
And shrieking at her window thrice
The raven flapp'd his wing. Tickel.

To FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young. L'Estrange.
The dire flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To fall with flaps or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn,
Let thy worst wig, long us'd to storms, be worn;
This knows the powder'd footman, and with care
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair. Gay.

FLA'DRAGON. n. f. [from a dragon supposed to breathe fire.]

1. A play in which they catch raisins out of burning brandy, and extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them.

2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.

1. To flutter with a splendid show.

She shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head. Shakspare.

2. To glitter with transient lustre.

Doctrine and life, colours, and light, in one
When they combine and mingle, bring
A strong regard and awe; but speech alone
Doth vanish like a flaring thing,
And in the ear, not conscience, rings. Herbert.

3. To glitter offensively.

When the sun begins to sing
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To arched walks of twilight groves. Milton.

4. To be in too much light.

I cannot stay
Flaring in sunshine all the day. Prior.

FLASH. n. f. [Dutch, Minshew.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.

When the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heav'n, I did present myself
E'en in the aim and very flash of it. Shakspare.
We see a flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
One with a flash begins, and ends in smog;
The other out of smog brings glorious light. Reformation.

And as Ægeon, when with heaven he strove,
Defy'd the forked lightning from afar,
At fifty mouths his flaming breath expires,
And flash for flash returns, and fires for fires. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.

Where be your gibes now? your gambols?
Your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were Wont to set the table in a roar? Shakspare.
Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for a while suspend reflection, and hide the sinner from himself, to such discourses
as awaken conscience. Rogers.

3. A short transient state.

The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash. Bacon.

4. A body of water driven by violence.

To FLASH. v. n.

They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought. Falton on the Classics.

To FLASH. v. a. To strike up large bodies of water from the surface.

With his raging arms he rudely flash'd
The waves about, and all his armour swept,
That all the blood and filth away was walk'd. Fairy Queen.

If the sea-water be flashed with a stick or oar,
the same casteth a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire. Caveau.

FLA'SHER. n. f. [from flash.] A man of more appearance of wit than reality.

FLA'SHILY. adv. [from flashy.] With empty show; without real power of wit, or solidity of thought.

FLA'SHY. adj. [from flash.]

1. Empty; not solid; showy without substance.

Flashy wits cannot fathom the whole extent of a large discourse. Digby on the Soul, Dedica.
When they list, their lean and flashy tongues
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched draw. Milton.

This mean conceit, this darling mystery,
Which thou think'st nothing, friend! thou shalt not buy;
Nor will I change for all the flashy wit. Dryden.

2. [from flaccidus, Skinner.] Inspid; without force or spirit.

Distilled books are, like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon's Essays.

FLAT. adj. [plat, French.]

1. Horizontally level without inclination.

Thou, all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world. Shakspare's King Lear.

Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton.

The houses are flat roofed to walk upon, so that every bomb that fell on them would take effect. Addison on Italy.

2. Smooth; without protuberances.

In the dawning of the next day we might plainly discern it was a land flat to our sight, and full of bogeage. Bacon.

3. Not elevated; fallen; not erect.

Cease 't admire, and beauty's plumes
Fall flat, and shrink into a trivial toy,
At every sudden lightning quite abash'd. Milton.

4. Level with the ground.

In them is plainest taught, and easiest learnt,
What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so,
What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat. Milton's Paradise Regained.

That Christ-church stands above ground, and that the church of Westminster lies not flat upon it, is your lordship's commendation. South.

5. Lying prostrate; lying along.

The wood-born people fall before her flat,
And worship her as goddess of the wood. Fairy Queen.

Which laid that wretched prince flat on the ground. David.

6. [In painting.] Wanting relief; wanting prominence of the figures.

7. Tasteless; insipid; dead.

He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece. Shaksp.
Taste so divine! that what of sweet before Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this and harsh. Milton.

The miry fields
Rejoicing in rich mold, most ample fruit
Of beauteous form produce; pleasing to sight,
But to the tongue inelegant and flat. Philips.

8. Dull; unanimated; frigid.

Short speeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intentions; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted. Bacon.

Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryden.

9. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.

I feel my genial spirits droop,
My hopes all flat, nature within me seems
In all her functions weary of herself. Milton.

10. Unpleasing; tasteless.

How weary, stale, flat and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world! Shaksp.
To one firmly persuaded of the reality of heavenly happiness, and earnestly desirous of obtaining it, all earthly satisfactions must needs look little, and grow flat and unfavourable. Atterb.

11. Preremptory; absolute; downright.

His horse with flat tiring taught him, that discreet stays make speedy journeys. Sibbery.
It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word. Spenser's State of Ireland.

As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licentiousness. Spencer.

You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes;
Those prisoners you shall keep:
—I will, that 's flat. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

Thus repuls'd, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us. Milton's Par. Lost.

If thou sit in wine or wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Fratry gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story,
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his meek cloud of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

You had broke and robb'd his house,
And stole his talismanic boules;
And all his new-found old inventions,
With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras.

12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, out a flat noise or rattle. Bacon.

The upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp.

Ray on the Creation.

FLAT. n. f.

1. A level; an extended plane.

The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon.

Because the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expanse flesh or fish, both upon a flake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear. Wotton's Architecture.

He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit.

Addison on Italy.

2. Even ground; not mountainous.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
'Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'ertop old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The way is ready and not long,
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Fast by a mountain. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.

The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Kiss not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head, O'erhears your officers. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

All the infections, that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall. Shaksp.

Half my pow'rs this night,
Passing these flats, are taking by the tide;
These Lincoln walches have devour'd them. Shakespeare's King John.

4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shakespeare.

The difficulty is very great in bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh's Essays.

Having newly left these grammatical flats and shallows, where they fluck unreasonably, they are now turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and inquiet deeps of controversy. Milton.

Full in the prince's passage hills of land,
And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryden.

Must we now have occasion of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

5. The broad side of a blade.

A dated mandate came From that great will which moves this mighty frame,

Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the demons of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that flay behind. Dryden.

6. Depression of thought or language.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.

7. A surface without relief, or promi- nences.

Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills? Bentley.

To FLAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.

The ancients say, if you take two twigs of several fruit-trees, and flat them on the sides, and bind them close, and set them in the ground,
they will come up in one stock. Bacon.

With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,
Dilates their swelling lips, and flats their nose. Creech.

2. To make vapid.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four feet deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juice somewhat flattened. Bacon.

To FLAT. v. n.

1. To grow flat; to opposed to swell.

I burnt it the second time, and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more than at first. Temple.

2. To render unanimated or evanid.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

FLATLONG. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downward; not edgewise.

What a blow was there given?
—An it had fallen flatlong. Shaksp. Tempest.

FLATLY. adv. [from flat.]

1. Horizontally; without inclination.

2. Without prominence or elevation.

3. Without spirit; dully; frigidly.

4. Peremptorily; downright.

He in these wars had flatly refused his aid. Sidney.

Thereupon they flatly disavouch
To yield him more obedience, or support. Dan.

Unjust, thou say'st it,
Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free. Milt.

Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of such as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his existence, exclude him from directing the world. Bentley.

FLATNESS. n. f. [from flat.]

1. Evenness; level extension.

2. Want of relief or prominence.

It appears so very plain and uniform, that one would think the corner looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture. Addison on Medals.

3. Deadness; insipidity; vapidness.

Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. Dejection of fortune.

The emperor of Russia was my father;
Oh, that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery! Shakespeare.

5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.

How fast does obscurity, flatness, and imper-tinency flow in upon our meditations? 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.

6. Dulness; insipidity; frigidity.

Some of Homer's translators have swelled into fustian, and others sunk into flatness. Pope.

7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.

Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pale of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon.

To FLATTER. v. a. [flair, French; from flat.]

1. To make even or level, without promi- nence or elevation.

2. To beat down to the ground.

If they should lie in it, and beat it down, or flatten it, it will rise again. Mortimer.

3. To make vapid.

4. To deject; to depress; to dispirit.

To FLATTER. v. n.

1. To grow even or level.

2. To grow dull and insipid.

Here joys that endure for ever, flesh and in vigour, are opposed to satisfactions that are attended with satiety and surfeits, and flatten in the very tasting. L'Esperance.

FLATTER. n. f. [from flat.] The work- man or instrument by which bodies are flattened.

To FLATTER. v. a. [flatter, French.]

1. To sooth with praises; to please with blandishments; to gratify with servile obsequiousness; to gain by false compli- ments.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident, Or Jove for his power to thunder: his heart's his mouth: Shakespeare's King Lear.

What his breast forges that his tongue must vent. Shakespeare.

He that flattereth his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet. Proverbs.

He flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful. Psalms.

After this way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, they contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Deacy of Picty.

Averse alike to flatter or offend. Pope.

I scorn to flatter you or any man. Newman.

2. To praise falsely.

Flatter'd crimes of a licentious age,
Provoke our censure. Young.

3. To please; to sooth. This sense is purely gallic.

A concert of voices supporting themselves by their different parts makes a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears and flattens them. Dryden.

4. To raise false hopes.

He, always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee, of flatt'ring gales Unmindful. Milton.

FLATTERER. n. f. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing falsties.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perforce.

Bacon

If we from wealth to poverty descend,
Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend.

Dryden.

After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants.

Addison's Guardian.

The publick should know this: yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer.

Swift.

FLATTERY. n. f. [from flatter; flatterie, French.] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness;
And hold it mean to borrow ought from flattery.

Rowe.

Simple pride for flattery makes demands.
See how they beg an alms of flattery!

They languish, O! support them with a lye.

Young.

FLATTISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.

There are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flattish shape.

Woodward on Fossils.

FLATULENCY. n. f. [from flatulent.]

1. Windiness; fulness of wind; turbulence by wind confined.

Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency.

Arbuthnot

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.

Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions.

Glanville.

FLATULENT. adj. [flatulentus, flatus, Latin.]

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion.

Arbuthnot.

Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again.

Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity.

Glanville.

How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works.

Dryden.

FLATUOSITY. n. f. [flatuosité, French; from flatus, Latin.] Windiness; fulness of air.

The cause is flatulosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all purgers have in them a raw spirit of wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly.

Bacon.

FLATUOUS. adj. [from flatus, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and so sendeth it to the mesentery veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine.

Bacon's Natural History

FLATUS. n. f. [Latin.] Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore discoloured by warm aromatics.

Quincy.

FLATWISE. adj. [flat and wise; so it should be written, not flatways.] With the flat downward; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the site of the stratum in which it was deposited.

Woodward on Fossils

TO FLAUNT. v. n.

1. To make a fluttering show in apparel.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honey-luckle

Milton.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough vain to imitate their own desires to their vanity.

Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,
For useless ornament and flaunting show:

We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,
And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine.

Dryden.

You sat, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family.

Arbuth.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper: the words flaunt and flutter might with more propriety have changed their places.

Fortune in men has some small difference made;
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade.

Pope.

FLAUNT. n. f. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble, Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how Should I in these my burrow'd flaunts behold
The sternness of his presence!

Shakespeare.

FLAVOUR. n. f.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early.

Addison.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,
With bending heads, to night their bloom disclose,
Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows.

Dryden.

FLAVOROUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degenerate there, and fruits decline'd
From their first flavourous taste, renounce their kind.

Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW. n. f. [flaw, to break; ploh, Saxon, a garment.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws
Or ere I weep.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Wool, new-storm, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the lung-hole open.

Bacon's Natural History.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw.

Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found:
'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound.

Dryd.

As if great Atlas, from his height,
Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;
And with a mighty flaw the flaming walt, as once it shall,

Should gape immense, and rushing down, o'erwhelm this nether ball.

Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's bow,
Or some frail china-ear receive a flaw.

Pope.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin.

Swift.

2. A fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scribes and brokers do value unfound men to serve their own turn.

Bacon's Essays.

Tiditions were a proof alone,
Could we be certain such they were, so known:
But since some flaws in long detractions may be,
They make not truth but probability.

Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,
To null her jointure with a flaw.

Hudibras.

Their judgment has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires.

Addison.

So many flaws had this vow in its first conception.

Atterbury.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from fluo, Latin.] Obsolete.

Being incens'd, he's flint;
As humorous as winter, and as sudden
As flaws congeal the spring of day.

Shaksp.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,

Should patch a wall, & expel the winter's flaw.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

As a huge fish, laid Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw frid,

Shoots back; to, sent against the ground,
Was foil'd Eumelus.

Chapman's Iliad.

Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,

Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argelies loud,
And Thraçias rend the woods, and seas upturn.

Milton.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but myself
Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,

As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basins underneath,
Are to the main inconsiderable.

Milton.

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
Until the golden circuit on thy head
Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw.

Shakespeare's Henry vi.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,
And deluges of armies from the town
Came pouring in; I heard the mighty flaw;
When first it broke, the crowding ensigns saw
Which choak'd the passage.

Dryden's Aureng.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would become
A woman's story at a Winter's fire.

Shakespeare.

TO FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,
A lack, too weak the conflict to support,
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup.

Boyle.

The brazen culdrons with the frosts are flaw'd,
The garment stiff with ice, at hearths is thaw'd.

Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath at-tach'd

Our merchant's goods.

Shaksp. Henry VIII.

FLAWLESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless, shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous.

Boyle.

FLAWN. n. f. [plena, Saxon; flan French; vlaye, Dutch.] A sort of cuillard; a pie baked in a dish.

Fill oven full of flaws, Ginny pass not for sleep,
To-morrow thy father his wake-day will keep.

With pensive labour draws the flaxen thread.

The best materials for making ligatures are the flaxen thread that thornmakers use.

2. Fair, long, and flowing, as if made of flax.

I bought a fine flaxen long wig

FLA'XWEED. n. f. A plant.

To FLAY. v. a. [ad flaa, Islandick; flae, Danish; vlaan, Dutch.]

1. To strip off the skin.

I must have been eaten with wild beasts, or have fallen into the hands of the Spaniards, and been flayed alive.

Whilst the old leitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices.

Then give command the sacrifice to haste;
Let the flay'd victims in the plains be cast;
And sacred vows, and mystick song, apply'd
To grisly Pluto and his gloomy bride.

2. To take off the skin or surface of any thing.

They flay their skin from off them, break their bones, and chop them in pieces.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins.

FLA'YER. n. f. [from flay.] He that strips off the skin of any thing.

FLA. n. f. [plea, Saxon; vloey, Dutch; flaech, Scottish.] A small red insect remarkable for its agility in leaping, which sucks the blood of larger animals.

While wormwood hath seed, get a handful or twain,

To save against March to make fla to refrain:
Where chamber is swept, and wormwood is srown,

No fla for his life dare abide to be known.

A valiant fla that dares eat his breakfast on the tip of a lion.

Flas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture.

To FLEA. v. a. [from the noun.] To clean from fleas.

FLE'ABANE. n. f. [flea and bane.] A plant.

It hath undivided leaves, which, for the most part, are glutinous, and have a strong scent: the cup of the flower is for the most part scaly, and of a cylindrical form: the flower is composed of many florets, which are succeeded by seeds with a downy substance adhering to them.

FLE'ABITE. } n. f. [flea and bite.]

FLE'ABITING. } n. f. [flea and bite.]

Lay waving round.

To FLEDGE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

To furnish with wings; to supply with feathers.

The birds were not as yet fledged enough to shift for themselves.

The speedy growth of birds that are hatched in nests, and fed by the old ones, till they be fledged and come almost to full bigness in about a fortnight, seems to me an argument of Providence.

The sandals of celestial mould,
Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold,
Surround her feet.

To FLEER. v. n. pret. fled. [This word is now almost universally written fly, though properly to fly, *fleo*zan, flew, is to move with wings, and flee, flean, to run away. They are now confounded.] To run from danger; to have recourse to shelter.

Behold, this city is near to flee unto.

Macduff is fled to England.

Were men so dull they could not see
That Lyce painted; should they flee
Like simple birds into a net,

So grossly woven and ill set?

None of us fall into those circumstances of danger, want, or pain, that can have hopes of relief but from God alone; none in all the world to flee to, but him.

FLEECE. n. f. [plyr, pley, Saxon; vleese, Dutch.] As much wool as is shorn from one sheep.

Giving account of the annual increase
Both of their lambs and of their woolly fleece.

So many days my ewes have been with young,
So many months ere I shall shear the fleece.

I am shepherd to another man,
And do not shear the fleece that I graze.

Sailors have used every night to hang fleece of wool on the sides of their ships, towards the water; and they have crushed fresh water out of them in the morning.

The sheep will prove much to the advantage of the woollen manufacture, by the fineness of the fleece.

To FLEECE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To clip the fleece off a sheep.

2. To strip; to pull; to plunder, as a sheep is robbed of its wool.

Courts of justice have a small pension, so that they are tempted to take bribes, and to fleece the people.

FLEE'CED. adj. [from fleece.] Having fleece of wool.

As when two rams, stirr'd with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleece'd flock,
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meet, that with the terror of the shock
Antonied both stand senseless as a block.

FLEE'CY. adj. [from fleece.] Woolly; covered with wool.

Not all the fleece wealth
That doth enrich these downs is worth a thought
To that my errand.

From eastern point
Of Libra, to the fleecey star, that bears
Andromeda far off Atlantic seas.

Let her glad valleys smile with wavy corn;
Let fleecey flocks her rising hills adorn.

The good shepherd tends his fleecey care,
Seeks bestest pasture, and the purest air;
Explores the lost, the wand'ring sheep dued.

Shakespeare.
A wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul flee. Shakespeare.
2. To be in a transient state; the same with flee.
Our understanding, to make a complete notion,
must add something else to this fleeing and unremarkable superficialities, that may bring it to our acquaintance. Digby on Bodies.

- O fleeing joys
Of Paradise, dear bought with lasting woe!
Adrian.
- While I listen to thy voice,
Chloris! I feel my life decay:
That powerful noise
Calls my fleeing soul away. Waller.
As empty clouds by rising winds are tost,
Their fleeing forms scarce sooner found than lost. Prior.
- To FLEET. v. a.
1. To skim the water.
Who swelling sails in Caspian sea doth cross,
And in frail wood an Adrian gulph doth flee,
Doth not, I ween, so many evils meet. Fairy Q.

The stores of all she shows, and all she hides,
If men with fleetly morsels must be fed,
And chaw with bloody teeth the breathing bread.
Dryden.

4. Human; not celestial; not spiritual.

Elie, never could the force of fleetly arm
Ne molten metal in his flesh embrace.
Th' eternal Lord in fleetly shrine
Enwombed was, from wretched Adam's line,
To purge away the guilt of sinful crime.
Much ostentation, vain fleetly arm,
And of frail arms, much instrument of war
Before mine eyes thou'lt set.
Milton's Par. Reg.

FLESHMEAT. n. f. [flesh and meat.] Animal food; the flesh of animals prepared for food.

The most convenient diet is that of fleshmeats.

In this prodigious plenty of cattle and dearth of human creatures, fleshmeat is monstrously dear.
Swift.

They may, blood-shaken then,
Feel such a fleshquake to possess their powers,
As they shall cry like ours:
In sound of peace or wars,
No harp'er hit the stars.
Ben Jonson's New Inn.

FLESHY. adj. [from flesh.]

1. Plump; full of flesh; fat; muscular.

All Ethiopes are fleshy and plump, and have great lips; all which betoken moisture retained, and not drawn out.
Bacon.

We say it is a fleshy stile when there is much periphrases and circuit of words, and when with more than enough it grows fat and corpulent.

The sole of his foot is flat and broad, being very fleshy, and covered only with a thick skin;
but very fit to travel in sandy places.
Ray.

2. Pulpous; plump: with regard to fruits.

Those fruits that are so fleshy, as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink
by mixture of water.
Bacon.

That flexanimous and golden-tongued orator.
Howell.

FLEXIBILITY. n. f. [flexibilité, French; from flexible.]

1. The quality of admitting to be bent; pliancy.

Do not the rays which differ in refrangibility differ also in flexibility? And are they not, by their different inflexions, separated from one another, so as after separation to make the colours.
Newton's Opticks.

Corpuscles of the same set agree in every thing;
but those that are of diverse kinds differ in specific gravity, in hardness, and in flexibility, as in bigness and figure.
Woodward.

2. Easiness to be persuaded; ductility of mind; compliance; facility.

Resolve rather to err by too much flexibility than too much perverseness, by meekness than by self-love.
Hammond.

FLEXIBLE. adj. [flexibilis, Latin; flexible, French.]

1. Possible to be bent; not brittle; easy to be bent; pliant; not stiff.

When splitting winds
Make flexible the knees of knotted oaks.
Shakespeare.

Take a stock gilly-flower, tie it upon a stick, put them both into a glass full of quicksilver, so that the flower be covered: after four or five days you will find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was.
Bacon.

2. Not rigid; not inexorable; complying; obsequious.

Phocyon was a man of great severity, and no ways flexible to the will of the people.
Bacon.

3. Ductile; manageable.

Under whose care soever a child is put to be taught, during the tender and flexible years of his life, it should be one who thinks Latin and language the least part of education.
Locke.

4. That may be accommodated to various forms and purposes.

This was a principle more flexible to their purpose.
Rogers.

FLEXIBILITY. n. f. [from flexible.]

1. Possibility to be bent; not brittleness; easiness to be bent; not stiffness; pliancy; pliancy.

I will rather chuse to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead,
whose embased flexibility shall be forced to bend.
King Charles.

Keep those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise; by reason of their flexibility and weight, would sag or curl.
Boyle.

2. Facility; obsequiousness; compliance.

3. Ductility; manageableness.

The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable.
Locke.

FLEXILE. adj. [flexilis, Latin.] Pliant; easily bent; obsequious to any power or impulse.

Every flexile wave
Obeys the blast, th' aerial tumult swells.
Thompson.

FLEXION. n. f. [flexio, Latin.]

Of a famous pipe that may have some four flexions, trial would be made.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

3. A turn toward any part or quarter.

Very cauteh sometimes tears, and a flexion or cast of the eye aside.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FLEXOR. n. f. [Latin.] The general name of the muscles which act in contracting the joints.

Flatterers, who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back.
Arbuthnot.

FLEXUOUS. adj. [flexuosus, Latin.]

1. Winding; full of turns and meanders; tortuous.

In regard of the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow crannies, and the restrained flexuous rivulets of corporal things, are all contemptible.
Digby.

2. Bending; not straight; variable; not steady.

The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we did not feel; and the flexuous burning of flames doth shew the air beginneth to be unquiet.
Bacon's Natural History.

FLEXURE. n. f. [flexura, Latin.]

1. The form or direction in which any thing is bent.

Contrary is the flexure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joint of their hind legs bends backward.
Boyle.

2. The act of bending.

The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure.
Shakespeare.

3. The part bent; the joint.

His mighty strength lies in his able loins,
And where the flexure of his navel joins.
Sandys.

4. Obsequious or servile cringe. Not used.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will give place to flexure and low bends? Shakespeare.

TO FLICKER. v. a. [figheren, Dutch; plecperan, Saxon.] To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.

The wreath of radiant fire,
On flickering Phœbus' front.
Shakespeare.

'Tis a ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,
And Phoebus, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flickering on her nest made short essays to sing.
Dryden.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;
Then flickering to his pail'd lips, she strove
To print a kiss, the last effigy of love.
Dryden.

FLIER. n. f. [from fly.]

1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.

The gates are open, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Now the fliers from and tusslers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them.
King Charles.

2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest: as in a jack.

The flier tho' had laden feet,
Turn'd so quick, you scarce could see't.
Swift.

FLIGHT. n. f. [from To fly.]

1. The act of flying or running from danger.

And now, too late, he wishes for the flight,
That strength he wasted in ignoble flight.
He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,
And claims the prize because he best did run.
Dryden's Ind. Emp.

As eager of the chase, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan saw and lov'd, and, burning with desire,
Pursu'd her flight; her flight increas'd his fire.
Pope.

2. The act of using wings; volation.

For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
That from his lower tract he dar'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser.
The fury spring above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Latican palace took her flight. Dryden.
Winds that tempests brew,
When through Arabian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, lole their spite. Dryden.

3. Removed from place to place by means of wings.

Ere the bat hath flown
His cloyster'd flight. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
The fowls shall take their flight away together. A. Esdras.
Fowls, by winter forc'd, forsake the flocks,
And wing their hasty flight to happier lands. Dryden's Aschd.

4. A flock of birds flying together.

Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest. Shakspeare.
They take great pride in the feathers of birds, and thus they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited into it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon's New Atlantis.

I can at will, doubt not,
Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, on my cup I attend. Milton.

5. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flights of pigeons.

6. A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.

At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full threescore Scouts the flew. Chevy Chase.
Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Swift.

7. The space past by flying.

8. Heat of imagination; folly of the soul.

Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,
When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.
He threw'd all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has fail'd in some of his flights, it was because he attempted every thing. Pope.
Strange graces still, and stranger flights she had;
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.
Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail. Pope.

9. Excursion on the wing.

If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interests of France were but to conferre its present greatness. Temple.
It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to decide these things. Tillotson.

10. The power of flying.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way. Shakspeare.

FLIGHTY. adj. [from flight.]

Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it. Shakspeare.

2. Wild; full of imagination.

FLIMSY. adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers.]

1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.

2. Mean; spiritless; without force.

Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines. Pope.

TO FLINCH. v. n. [corrupted from fling. Skianer.]

1. To shrink from any suffering or under-taking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.

Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other: nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South.
A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.

Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

2. In Shakspeare it signifies to fail.

If I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpunish'd let me die. Shakspeare.

FLINCHER. n. s. [from the verb.] He who shrinks or fails in any matter.

TO FLING. v. n. preter. flung; part. flung or flong. [from fligo, Lat. Skinner: according to others from flying; so to fling is to set flying.]

1. To cast from the hand; to throw.

The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs
Upon him. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
'Tis fate that flings the dice; and as she flings,
Of kings make peasants, and of peasants kings. Dryden.

2. To dart; to cast with violence.

How much unlike that Hector who return'd Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung. Denham.

3. To scatter.

Ev'ry beam new transient colours flings, Colours that change when'er they wave their wings. Pope.

4. To drive by violence.

A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds. Burnett.

5. To move forcibly.

The knight seeing his habitation reduced to so small compass, ordered all the apartments to be flung open. Addison's Spectator.

6. To cast: in an ill sense.

I know thy generous temper:
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It straight takes fire. Addison's Cato.

7. To force into another condition, probably into a worse.

Squalid fortune, into baseness flung,
Duth scorn the pride of wonted ornaments. Spenser.

8. TO FLING AWAY. To eject; to dismiss.

Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shakspeare.

9. TO FLING DOWN. To demolish; to ruin.

These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward.

10. TO FLING OFF. To baffle in the chase; to defeat of a prey.

These men are too well acquainted with the chase to be flung off by any false steps or doubles. Addison's Spectator.

TO FLING. v. n.

1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.

The angry beast
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his sense. Hudibras.

Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them wince and fling as if they had some mettle. Tillotson.

2. TO FLING OUT. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.

Duncan's horses,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience. Shakspeare.

FLING. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A throw; a cast.

2. A gibe; a sneer; a contemptuous remark.

No little scribbler is of wit so bare,
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair. Addison.
I, who love to have a fling
Both at senate-house and king,
Thought no method more commodious
Than to shew their vices odious. Swift.

FLINGER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. He who throws.

2. He who jeers.

FLINT. n. s. [flint, Saxon.]

1. A semipellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish gray, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invested with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough: its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glassmaking. Hill on Fossils.

Searching the window for a flint, I found This paper. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.
Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred;

A flint will break upon a featherbed. Chaucer.
There is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun.

Take this, and lay your flint edg'd weapon by.
Dryden.

above that of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished concidence and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood.
Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better.
South.

FLOWER. n. f. [flor, French; flus, flores, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petals, a flamen, apex, and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller, and which usually have but one single file; and compounded, which consist of many flocculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one entire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many forming petals, or leaves; as in burage, buglos: or polypetalous, which have distinct petals, and those falling off singly, and not altogether, as the seeming petals of monopetalous flowers always do; but those are further divided into uniform and disform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the disform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage and deadnettle. A monopetalous disform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-bilobed, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the aristolochia: 2d, bilobed; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the bilobed flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcistus; but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and represents a kind of helmet, or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galeate, cucullate, and galeuculate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the laminium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes the laminium is entire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Coriaceous; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the caricium, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compound flowers are first, discous, or discoidal; that is, whose disculi are set so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petals standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched, and jagged, as the hieracia. 3d, Fistular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petals, are called staminateous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the jules, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cat-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Milner.

Good men's lives

Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying ere they sicken. Shaksp. Macbeth.

With flow'r inwoven tresses torn

The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton.

Beautiful flowers why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead. Cowley.

Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

The nomination of persons to those places being so prime and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Hakewill.

Truth needs no flowers of speech. Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long:
In flow'r of age you perish for a long. Pope.

4. The edible part of corn; the meal.

The bread I would have in flowers, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want. Spenser on Ireland.

I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakspere.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd,
Next these in words, and firm those urns be seal'd;

Be twice ten measures of the choicest flour
Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour.
Pope's Odyssey.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the Psalms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hosier.

Thou hast slain

The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Statp.

The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects: the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Arbuthnot.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable.

He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shakspere.

FLO'WER de Luce. n. f. A bulbous iris.

Miller specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Crop'd are the flower de luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Statp.

The iris is the flower de luce. Peacham.

To FLO'WER. v. n. [fleurir, French; or from the noun.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they march'd in this goodly sort,
To take the foliage of the open air,
And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport. Fairy Queen.

Sacred hill, whose head full high,
Is, as it were, for endless memory
Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,
For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd. Fairy Queen.

Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd,
Op'ning their various colours. Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,

If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load. Dryden's Georg.

To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,
And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,
Like swallow swift, I wandered here and there;

For heat of heedless lust me did so sting,
That I of doubted danger had no fear. Spenser.

This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine. Shak.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little: whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh. Bacon.

An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits so smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowering. Bacon's Natural History.

4. To come as cream from the surface.

If you can accept of these few observations, which have flower'd off, and are, as it were, the burnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of. Milton.

To FLO'WER. v. a. [from the noun.]

To adorn with fictitious or imitated flowers.

FLO'W'ERAGE. n. f. [from flower.] Store of flowers.

FLO'W'ERET. n. f. [fleuriet, French.] A flower; a small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would disguise
With gaudy garlands, or fresh flow'rets dight,
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. Fairy Queen.

That same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,

Stood now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. Shakspere.

So to the Sylvan lodge

They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smells. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around;

But no substantial nourishment receives,
Infirm the stalks, unfold are the leaves. Dryd.

FLO'W'ERGARDEN. n. f. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.

Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try those shells in my flowergarden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLO'W'KORT. n. f. The name of a plant.

FLO'WN. The participle of fly, or flee, they being confounded; properly of fly.

1. Gone away.

For those,
Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
Flow to the upper world. Milton.

Where, my deluded sense? was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate.

And when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from your deeds I rightly may divine,
Unseemly flown with insolence or wine. Pope.

FLU'CTUANT. adj. [fluens, Latin.] Wavering; uncertain.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand withing and banking at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion? L'Estrange.

To FLU'CTUATE. v. n. [fluere, Latin.]

1. To roll to and again, as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors how'ring there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame. Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.

Fluctuates disturb'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has hitherto been of an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.
FLUCTUATION. n. f. [fluctuatio, Latin; fluctuation, French; from fluctuare.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interagency irregulates. Brown.
They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a proselyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be cased of it by any thing but error. Boyle.

- FLUE. n. f. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flow of fly.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

- FLUELLIN. n. f. The herb SPEEDWELL.

- FLUENCY. n. f. [from fluens.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit. Garth's Preface to Ovid.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.
We reason with such fluency and fire, The beaux we battle, and the learned tire. Tickel.

The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both. Swift.

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease, Behold him tost on seas. Sandys' Paraph. on Job.
God riches and renown to men imparts, Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts Cannot to great a fluency receive, But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

- FLUENT. adj. [fluens, Latin.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluens, but stupified. Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.

Motion being a fluens thing, and one part of its duration being independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must do so the next. Ray.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluens and luxurious speech. Bacon.

- FLUID. adj. [fluidus, Latin; fluide, French.] Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind The fluid fumes of that same wat'ry cloud, Lest it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milton.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton.

- FLUID. n. f.

1. Any thing not solid.

2. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

- FLUIDITY. n. f. [fluidité, Fr. from fluid.]

The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton.

A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity. Arbuthnot.

- FLUIDNESS. n. f. [from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should lay that fluidity and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

- FLUMMERY. n. f. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatflower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery are very fit for children. Locke.

Boyle

FLUXION. n. f. [fluxio, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing.

2. The matter that flows.

The fluxion increased, and abscesses were raised.
Wise man

3. [In mathematica.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small or infinitely small quantity, which, being taken an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity given.
Harris

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life.
Watts

TO FLY. v. n. pret. flew or fled; part.

fled or flown. [pleogan, Saxon. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown. To flee is to escape, or to go away, flean, Saxon, and makes fled. They are now confounded.]

1. To move through the air with wings.

Ere the bat hath flew

His cloister'd flight.
Shakespeare's Macbeth

Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heav'n.
Genesis

These men's hastiness the warier sort of you do not commend: ye with they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown.
Hucker

FLY

2. To pass through the air.

Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward.
Job

3. To pass away, with the idea of swiftness or escape.

Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme,
Help thee to pass the tedious time,
Which else would on thy hand remain;
Though flown, it ne'er looks back again.
Prior

4. To pass swiftly.

The scouts with *fly*ing speed
Return, and through the city spread the news.
Dryden

Earth rolls back beneath the *fly*ing sled.
Pope

5. To move with rapidity.

Behold, a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, of your bottle flies.
Swift

8. [flean, Saxon; fliehen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape.

In this sense the verb is properly to flee, whence fled is formed; but the following examples show that they are confounded: they are confounded oftener in the present than in the preter tense.

Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the *fly*ing prey.
Spenser
Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake.
Zech

Abiathar escaped and fled after David. 1 Sam.
What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,
Reviv'd the drooping arts again;
If science rain'd her head,
And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled.
Dryden

He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone.
Prior

I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;

From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
Forfake mankind, and all the world but love.
Pope

9. To FLY at. To spring with violence upon; to fall on suddenly.

A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, threat'ning enrag'd, Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead.
Shakespeare

Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and fly at him.
Bacon's Natural History

No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat.
South's Sermons

This is an age that flies at all learnings, and enquires especially into faults.
South

10. To FLY in the face. To insult.

This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself.
Swift's Drapier's Letters

11. To FLY in the face. To act in defiance.

Fly in nature's face:
—But how, if nature fly in my face first?
—Then nature's the aggressor.
Dryden

12. To FLY off. To revolt.

Deny to speak to me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;
The images of revolt and *fly*ing off.
Shakespeare

FLY

The traitor Syphas
Flow off at once with his Numidian horse.
Addison's Cato.

13. To FLY out. To burst into passion.

How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks.
Ben Jonson's Catiline.

Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out Into contumely and neglect. Collier's Friend.

14. To FLY out. To break out into licence.

You use me like a courser spur'd and rein'd:
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dry.
Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent. Dryden.

15. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.

All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley's Sermons.

16. To let FLY. To discharge.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rending sky. Gran.

17. To be light and unencumbered: as, a flying camp.

To FLY. v. a.

1. To flun; to avoid; to decline.

Love like a shadow flies, when subsequence love
pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues. Shakspeare.

O Jove, I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakspeare.

If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it.
Bacon's Essays.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The fight of this so horrid spectacle. Milton.

2. To refuse association with.

Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares
oppress'd,

And his tofs'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade. Dryden's Juvenal.
Nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryd.

Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who sail'd in air. Dryden's Æn.

4. To attack by a bird of prey.

If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.

5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterit of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape: flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded. I know not any book except the scriptures in which fly and flies are carefully kept separate.

FLY. n. f. [fleoige, Saxon.]

1. A small winged insect of many species.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakspeare's Lear.

again with another story. L'Estrange.

2. To FOB off. To shift off; to put aside with an artifice; to delude by a trick.

You must not think
To fob off your disgraces with a tale. Shakspeare.

For they, poor knaves, were glad to cheat,
To get their wives and children meat;

But these will not be fobb'd off so;
They must have wealth and power too. Hadib.

By a Ravenna vintner once betray'd,
So much for wine and water mix'd I paid;

But when I thought the purchas'd liquor mine,
The rascal fobb'd me off with only wine. Addif.

Being a great lover of country-sports, I absolutely determined not to be a minister of state, nor to be fobb'd off with a garter. Addif.

Thus foil'd their mightieſt. Milton.

Leader of theſe armies bright,

Which but th' omnipotent none could have foil'd.

Milton.

Yet theſe ſubject not: I to thee diſcloſe

What inward thence I feel, not therefore foil'd:

Who meet with various objects, from the ſenſe

Variously repreſenting: yet ſtill free,

Approve the beſt, and follow what I approve.

Milton.

Strange, that your fingers ſhould the pencil foil,

Without the help of colours or of oil! Waller.

He had been foiled in the cure, and had left it to nature. Wiſeman's Surgery.

In their conflicts with ſin they have been ſo often foiled, that they now deſpair of ever getting the day. Columy's Sermons.

Virtue, diſdaine, deſpair, I oft have wy'd;
And, foil'd, have with new arms my foe defy'd.
Dryden.

But I, the comfort of the thunderer,
Have wag'd a long and unſucceſſful war;
With various arts and arms in vain have toil'd,
And by a mortal man at length am foil'd. Dryd.

2. [from ſouiller, French.] To blunt; to dull.

When light-wing'd toys

Of feather'd Cupid foil, with wanton dulneſs,

My ſpeculative and offic'd inſtruments. Shakſp.

3. To defeat; to puzzle.

Whilst I am following one character, I am croſs'd in my way by another, and put up ſuch a variety of odd creatures in both ſexes, that they foil the ſcent of one another, and puzzle the chace. Addiſon.

FOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A defeat; a miſcarriage; an advantage gained without a complete conqueſt.

We of thy cunning had no diffidence;

One ſudden foil ſhall never breed diſtruſt. Shakſp.

Whoſoever overthroweth his mate in ſuch ſort,

as that either his back, or the one ſhoulder, and contrary heel do touch the ground, ſhall be accounted to give the fall: if he be endangered, and make a narrow eſcape, it is call'd a foil.

Carew.

So after many a foil the tempter proud,

Renewing freſh assaults, admitts his pride,

Fell whence he ſtood to ſee his victor fall. Milt.

FOLIA'TION. n. f. [foliation, folium, Lat.]

1. The act of beating into thin leaves.

2. Foliation is one of the parts of a flower, being the collection of those fugacious coloured leaves called petals, which constitute the compass of the flower ; and sometimes guard the fruit which succeeds the foliation, as in apples and pears, and sometimes stand within it, as in cherries and apricots ; for these, being tender and pulpy, and coming forth in the spring, would be injured by the weather, if they were not lodged up within their flowers.

Quincy.

FOL'IO. n. f. [in folio, Latin.] A large book of which the pages are formed by a sheet of paper once doubled.

Plumbinus and Plumbeo made less progress in knowledge, though they had read over more folios.

Watts on the Mind.

FOL'LIOMORT. adj. [folium mortuum, Lat.]

A dark yellow ; the colour of a leaf faded ; vulgarly called philomort.

A flinty pebble was of a dark-green colour,
and the exterior cortex of a foliomort colour.

Woodward on Fossils.

FOL'K. n. f. [folk, Saxon ; volk, Dutch :
it is properly a noun collective, and has no plural but by modern corruption.]

1. People, in familiar language.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather fitting to his dolor dolorous discourses of their own and other folk's misfortune.

Sidney.

Dorilaus having married his sister, had his marriage in short time blest, for so are folk wont to say, how unhappy so ever the children after grow, with a tun.

Sidney.

When with greatest art he spoke,
You'd think he talk'd like other folk ;
For all a rhetorician's rules

Teach nothing but to name his tools.

Hudibras.

2. Nations ; mankind.

Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth.

Psalms.

3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.

The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between ;
And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,
Say it did so a little time before.

Shakespeare.

Anger is a kind of baleness ; as it appears well in the weakness of children, women, old folk, and sick folk.

Bacon.

4. It is now used only in familiar or burlesque language.

Old good man Dobson of the green,
Remembers he the tree has seen,
And goes with folk to shew the fight.

Swift.

He walk'd and wore a threadbare cloak ;
He din'd and sup'd at charge of other folk.

Swift.

FOL'KMOTS. n. f. [from folk and mote.]

Those hills were appointed for two special uses, and built by two several nations : the one is that which you call folkmotes, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxon a meeting of folk.

Spenser on Ireland.

FOL'LIC'LE. n. f. [folliculus, Latin.]

1. A cavity in any body with strong coats.

Although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour ; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts.

Brewer.

2. Follicle is a term in botany signifying seed-vessels, capsulae feminis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pedicularis, &c. Quincy.

To FOLLOW. v. a. [polgrian, Saxon; volgen, Dutch.]

1. To go after; not before, or side by side.

I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf. Shakespeare.

Follow'd in bright procession, to behold Creation, and the wonders of his might. Milton.

But follow strait, invisibly thus led? Milton.

2. To pursue as an enemy; to chase. Where ranks fell thickest was indeed the place To seek Sebastian, through a track of death I follow'd him by groans of dying foes. Dryden.

3. To accompany; not to forsake. Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain God is as here, and will be found alike Present, and of his presence many a sign Still following thee, still compassing thee round With goodness and paternal love, his face Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.

Follow'd with acclamation and the sound Symphonious of ten thousand harps that tun'd Angelic harmonies. Milton.

4. To attend as a dependant. And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and follow'd Saul to the battle. Samuel.

Let not the muse then flatter lawless sway, Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

5. To go after, as a teacher. Not yielding over to old age his country delights, he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney.

Some pious tears the pitying hero paid, And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade. Dryden's Aeneid.

We follow fate, which does too fast pursue. Dryden.

6. To succeed in order of time. Such follow him as shall be register'd, Part good, part bad, of bad the longer scroll. Milton.

Signs following signs, lead on the mighty year. Pope.

7. To be consequential in argument, as effects to causes. I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold And vent'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear What yet they know must follow, to endure Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain. Milton.

8. To imitate; to copy as a pupil; or to be of an opinion or party.

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancienter and better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse, we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Hooker.

All patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke.

9. To obey; to observe, as a guide or direction.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no Christians. Tilistson.

Most men admire Virtue, who follow not her lore. Par. Regain'd. Fair virtue should I follow thee, I should be naked and alone, For thou art not in company, And scarce art to be found in one. Evelyn.

10. To pursue as an object of desire. Follow peace with all men. Hebrews. Follow not that which is evil. John.

11. To confirm by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.

They bound themselves to his laws and obedience; and in case it had been follow'd upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility. Spenser.

12. To attend to; to be busied with.

He that undertaketh and followeth other men's business for gain, shall fall into suits. Ecclesi.

To FOLLOW. v. n.

2. To attend fervently. Such smiling rogues as these foath every passion, That in the nature of their lords rebels: As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To be posterior in time.

4. To be consequential, as effect to cause. If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness mislead him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke. To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.

5. To be consequential, as inference to premises.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.

Dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power. Locke.

6. To continue endeavours; to persevere. Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. Hosea.

FOLLOWER. n. f. [from follow.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader; whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise, Spurn'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes. Dryden.

2. One who observes a guide or leader.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. South's Sermons.

3. An attendant or dependant.

No follower, but a friend. Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, can't thou tell that? —With Poins, and other his continual followers. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto the Irish chiefs too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. Spenser's State of Ireland.

And forc'd Aeneas, when his ships were lost, To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryden's Aeneid.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copier.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. 1 Corinthians.

The true profession of christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Spur's Sermons.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have. Locke.

The church of Smyrna professed they worthily loved the martyrs, as the disciples and followers of our Lord; and because of their exceeding great affection to their king and their master. Nelson.

The studious head or gen'rous mind, Follower of God, or friend of human kind, Poet or patriot, rose but to restore The faith and moral nature gave before. Pope.

7. One of the same faction or party. Fo'LLY. n. f. [folie, French.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

This is folly childhood's guide, This is childhood at her side. Harriett.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. Arbuthnot.

3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.

They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children. Wotton. Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires, Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires. Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. Locke.

FOMENTA'TION. n. f. [fomentation, Fr. from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot flannels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and disengage obstructed humours. Quincy.

Fomentation calleth forth the humour by vapours; but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultice, draweth gently the humours out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses. Arbuthnot on Coins.

FOMENTER. n. f. [from foment.] One that foment; an encourager; a supporter.

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politic at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up. Houel.

FON. n. f. [Scott. A word now obsolete.]

A fool; an idiot.

Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,

That loves the thing he cannot purchase. Spenser.

FOND. adj. [fon, Scottish. A word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology. To fonne is in Chaucer to doat, to be foolish.]

2. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent; injudicious.

That the Grecians or gentiles ever did think it a foad or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. Hooker.

He was beaten out of all love of learning by a foad school-master. Ascham.

Tell these sad women,
'Tis foad to wait inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakespeare's Coriol.

Grant I may never prove to foad
To trust man on his oath or bond. Shakespeare.

I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, foader than ignorance. Shaksf.

Foad thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
But one belief of all, is ever wise. Darwin.

Thou see'st
How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I relate;
Foad! were it not in hope of thy reply. Milton.

So foad are mortal men,
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves t' invite. Milton.

'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
Those ass's ears on Midas' temples hung;
But foad repentance of his happy wish. Waller.

But reason with your foad religion fights;
For many gods are many infinities. Dryden.

This is foad, because it is the way to cheat thyself.
Tillotson.

Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle, And handled you like a fopdoodle.

Hudibras.

FOPPERY. n. f. [from fop.]

1. Folly; impertinence.

Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter My sober house.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fauries; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fauries.

Shakespeare.

This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the forfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains on necessity.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.

3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in.

Stillingfleet.

But though we fetch from Italy and France Our fopperies of tune and modes of dance, Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense.

Granville.

I wish I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects.

Swift.

FOPFISH. adj. [from fop.]

An astrologer saith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment.

Bacon.

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon christendom for the propagation of their laws; so the christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention.

Bacon's War with Spain.

The governor falling out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for hate left behind them.

Knotley's Hist.

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victuals.

Knotley.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,

This cannot take her:

FOR

It of herself she will not love,

Nothing can make her.

Care not for frowns or smiles.

Suckling.

Denham.

The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wickeder for hoping.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him.

Taylor.

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low, that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them.

Dryden.

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers.

Locke.

A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little better for any thing else.

Locke.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests.

My open'd thought to joyous prospect raise,

And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise.

Which best or worst you could not think;

And die you must for want of drink.

Prior.

It is a most infamous scandal upon the nation, to reproach them for treating foreigners with contempt.

We can only give them that liberty now for something, which they have to many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us.

Your sermons will be less valuable, for want of time.

Swift.

2. With respect to; with regard to.

Rather our state's defective for requal, Than we to stretch it out.

Shaksp. Coriolanus.

A paltry ring That she did give me, whole poetry was,

For all the world, like cutler's poetry

Upon a knife; love me and leave me not.

Shaksp.

For all the world,

As thou art at this hour, was Richard then.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters.

Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps, youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politick.

Comets are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour, produceth what kind of effects.

For me, if there be such a thing as I.

He saith these honours consisted in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it.

Our laws were for their matter foreign.

Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; there being no other laws in China but the king's command.

For me, no other happiness I own,

Than to have born no issue to the throne.

For me, my stormy voyage at an end,

I to the port of death securely tend.

Dryden's Ac.

After death, we spirits have just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures.

How quickly nature

Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!

For this the foolish, over-careful fathers,

Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains
with care,

Their bones with industry: for this engross'd

The cank'rd heaps of strong achiev'd gold:

For this they have been thoughtful to invent

Their sons with arts and martial exercises.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The kingdom of God was first sent by ill counsel; upon which counsel there are set, for our instruction, two marks.

Bacon.

Whether some hero's fate,

In words worth dying for, he celebrates.

Cowley.

For he writes not for money, nor for praise,

Nor to be call'd a wit, nor to wear bays.

Denham.

There we shall see, a fight worthy dying for,
that blessed Saviour, who so highly deserves of us.

Boyle.

He is not disposed to be a fool, and to be miserable for company.

Tillotson.

Even death's become to me no dreadful name;
In fighting fields, where our acquaintance grew,

I saw him, and condemn'd him first for you.

Dryd.

For this, 'tis needful to prevent her art,

And fire with love the proud Phœnician's heart.

Dryden's Virgil.

Some pray for riches; riches they obtain;
But watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain.

Dryden.

Let them who truly would appear my friends,
Employ their swords like mine for noble ends.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

28. Of tendency to; toward.

The kettle to the top was hoist;

But with its upside down, to show

Its inclination for below.

Swift.

29. In favour of; on the part of; on the side of.

Ye suppose the laws for which ye strive are found in Scripture; but those not against which we strive.

Hunter, Preface.

It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have so often drawn it for a good one.

Dryden.

Jove was for Venus; but he fear'd his wife.

Dryden.

He for the world was made, not us alone.

Cowley.

They must be void of all zeal for God's honour, who do not with sighs and tears intercede with him.

Smallbridge.

Aristotle is for poetical justice.

Denon.

They are all for rank and foul feeding.

Fulton.

30. Noting accommodation or adaptation.

Fortune, if there be such a thing as she,

Spies that I bear so well her tyranny,

That she thinks nothing else to do for me.

Denon.

A few rules of logic are thought sufficient, in this case, for those who pretend to the highest improvement.

Locke.

It is for wicked men to dread God; but a virtuous man may have undisturbed thoughts, even of the justice of God.

Tillotson.

His country has good havens, both for the Adriatic and Mediterranean.

Addison's Idyl.

Persia is commodiously situated for trade both by sea and land.

Arbutnot on Laws.

Scholars are frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use.

Fulton.

31. With intention of.

And by that justice hath remov'd the cause
Of those rude tempests, which, for rapine sent

Too oft, alas, involv'd the innocent.

Waller.

Here huntmen with delight may read

How to chase dogs for scent or speed.

Waller.

God hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of.

Tillotson's Sermons.

For this, from Trivia's temple and her wood,
Are courtes driv'n, who shed their masters blood.

Dryden.

Such examples should be set before them, as patterns for their daily imitation.

Lacke.

The next question usually is, what is it for?

Lacke.

Achilles is for revenging himself upon Agamemnon, by means of Hector.

Broome.

32. Becoming; belonging to.

It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.

Shakespeare.

Th' offers he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take.

Daniel.

It were more for his honour to raise his siege, than to spend so many good men in the winning of it by force.

Knotles.

Jefts for Dutchmen and English boys.
Is it for you to ravish seas and land,

Cowley.

Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command! Dryden.

His fire already signs him for the skies,
And marks the seat amidst the deities.

Dryden.

It is a reasonable account for any man to give,
why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do,
and perish with them.

Tillotson.

33. Notwithstanding.

This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philo Judeus expresseth.

Hooker.

God's desertion shall, for ought he knows,
the next minute supervene.

Dreay of Piety.

Probability supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing yet certainly determined on either side.

South.

For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us.

Swift.

If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system.

Bentley.

34. To the use of; to be used in.

The oak for nothing ill,
The osier good for twigs, the poplar for the mill.

Spenser.

Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason.

Tillotson.

35. In consequence of.

For love they force through thickets of the wood,

Dryden.

They climb the steepy hills and stem the flood.

Dryden.

36. In recompence of; in return of.

Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Cæsar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.

Dryden's Persius.

First the wily wizard must be caught;
For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught.

Dryden's Virgil.

37. In proportion to.

He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall Shak.
As he could see clear, for those times, through superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy

Bacon.

Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!
Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;
Too noble for revenge.

Dryden's Juvenal.

38. By means of; by interposition of.

Moral consideration can no way move the frankle appetite, were it not for the will.

Hale's Origin of Mankind

Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God?

Tillotson.

39. In regard of; in preservation of.

I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.

Vol. I.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my heart. Shakespeare.
I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls. Addison's Spectator.

40. For all; notwithstanding.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing
I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprize.

Sidney.

For all the carefulness of the christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up.

Knotles' History.

But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,

Did shew the footing sound for all the flood.

Davies.

They resolute, for all this, do proceed
Unto that judgment.

Daniel.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home.

Stillington.

Though that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will,
for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account.

Boyle on Colours.

She might have passed over my business;
but my rabble is not to be mumbled up in silence,
for all her pertness.

Dryden.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition.

South.

41. For to.

In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to, the sign of the infinite mood, to note the final cause. As I come,
for to see you, for I love to see you:
in the same sense with the French pour.

Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and,
for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.

Who shall let me now
On this vile body for to wreak my wrong?

hairy Queen.

A large posterity
Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count.

These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain.

Bacon.

FOR. conj.

1. The word by which the reason is in- troduced of something advanced before.

Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not.

Shakespeare.

Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know,
Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one winter more would hold.

Denham.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit:
For the first matter loves variety less.

Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God.

Tillotson.

2. Because; on this account that.

It is in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men.

Spenser on Ireland.

Jealous souls will not be answer'd so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous.

Shakespeare.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant;

For she is with me.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid:
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame.

Furfox.

Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance.

Bacon's Natural History.

3. For as much. In regard to that; in consideration of.

For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest over-quick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of.

Hooker.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

4. For why. Because; for this reason that.

Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him.

Knotles.

To FORAGE. v. n. [from foris, abroad, Latin.]

1. To wander far; to rove at a distance. Not in use.

Forage, and run
To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh.

Shakespeare's King John.

2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night,
Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey.

Denham.

There was a brood of young larks in the corn,
and the dam went abroad to forage for them.

L'Estrange.

Nor dare they stray
When rain is promis'd or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their wat'ring take,
Not forage far, but short excursions make.

3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.

His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp Forage in blood of French nobility.

Shakespeare.

To FORAGE. v. s. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.

They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land.

Spenser on Ireland.

The victorious Philistines were worried by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army.

South.

FORAGE. n. f. [fourage, German and French; from foris, Latin.]

1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.

One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of bees, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
Ewes and their bleating lambs, over the plains
Their booty.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Provisions sought abroad.

Some o'er the public magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide.

3. Provisions in general.

Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd.

Dryden's Tamerlane.

FOR

FORAMINOUS. adj. [from foramen, Latin.] Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.

Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the found, will deaden it; but in the passage of the found they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon's Natural History.

To FORBEAR. v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbare; part. forborn. [forbæraa, Saxon. For has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear: or depravation; as, forfwear, and other powers not easily explained.]

1. To cease from any thing; to intermit. Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Cheyne.

2. To pause; to delay. I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two, Before you hazard; for in choosing wrong, I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakespeare.

3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.

He forbare to go forth. 1 Samuel.
At this he started, and forbare to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryd.
The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
When they their prey in pieces tear,
To quarrel with themselves forbear. Denham.

4. To restrain any violence of temper; to be patient. By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Proverbs.

To FORBEAR. v. a.

1. To decline; to avoid voluntarily. Forbear his presence, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure. Shakespeare.
So angry bulls the combat do forbear,
When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.

2. To abstain from; to shun to do; to omit.

If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or suspended. Clarendon.

There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South.

3. To spare; to treat with clemency. With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love. Eph.

4. To withhold. Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. 1 Chronicles.

FORBEARANCE. n. f. [from forbear.]

1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice. True nobleness would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. Shakespeare.

This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South.

Liberty is the power a man has to do, or forbear doing, any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Intermission of something.

3. Command of temper.

Have a continent forbearance, 'till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness.

Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding, but only to display the mildness and forbearance made use of under the reign of his present majesty. Addison's Freeholder.

He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBEARER. n. f. [from forbear.] An intermitter; interceptor of any thing.

The well as a father all goodness doth bring,
The east a forbearer, no manner of thing. Telfer.

To FORBID. v. a. pret. I forbade; part. forbidden or forbid. [forþeodan, Saxon; verbieden, Dutch.]

1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing. A witch, a queen, an old cooing queen; have I not forbid her my house? Shakespeare.

It is The practice and the purpose of the king,
From whose obedience I forbid my soul. Shaksp.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.

The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.

All hatred of persons, by very many christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Sprat.

The chaste and holy race
Are all forbidden this polluted place. Dryden.

2. To command to forbear any thing.

She with so sweet a rigour forbad him, that he durst not rebel. Sidney.

They have determined to consume all those things that God hath forbidden them to eat by his laws. Judith.

3. To oppose; to hinder.

The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilateth it. Bacon's Natural History.

The plaster alone would pen the humour, and so exasperate it, as well as forbid new humour. Bar.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the fight!
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

4. To accurse; to blast. Now obsolete.

To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse. Sleep shall neither night nor day Hang upon his penthouse lid;
He shall live a man forbid. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To FORBID. v. n. To utter a prohibition.

Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her own! Shakespeare.

FORBIDDANCE. n. f. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.

How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance! how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidden? Milton's Parad. Lost.

FORBIDDENLY. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.

With all confidence he swears, as he had seen't,
That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly. Shakespeare.

FORBIDDER. n. f. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.

This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbidder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown.

Other care, perhaps,
May have diverted from continual watch
Our great forbidder! Milton's Paradise Lost.

FORBIDDING. participial adj. [from forbid.] Raising abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.

Tragedy was made forbidding and horrible. A. Hill.

FORCE. n. f. [force, French; fortis, Latin.]

1. Strength; vigour; might; active power.

He never could maintain his part but in the force of his will. Shakespeare.

A ship, which hath struck sail, doth run By force of that force which before it won. Dante.

2. Violence.

Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown,
Which now they hold by force, and not by right. Shakespeare.

The shepherd Paris bore the Spartan bride
By force away, and then by force enjoy'd;
But I by free consent. Dryden.

3. Virtue; efficacy.

Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipped, hath in regard of us, great virtue, force, and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to stir up devotion. Hooker.

No definitions, no suppositions of any sect, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. Locke.

4. Validness; power of law.

A testament is of force after men are dead. Hebrews.

Not long in force this charter stood;
Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood. Denham.

5. Armament; warlike preparation. Often forces in the plural.

O thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye. Shaksp.
The secret of the power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.

A greater force than that which here we find,
Ne'er press'd the ocean, nor employ'd the wind. Waller.

Those victorious forces of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. Dryden.

6. Destiny; necessity; fatal compulsion.

To FORCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compel; to constrain.

Dangers are light, if they once seem light; and more dangers have deceived men than forced them. Bacon.

I have been forced to use the cant words of Whig and Tory. Swift's Examiner.

The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea. Broun.

2. To overpower by strength.

O that fortune
Had brought me to the field where thou art faw'd
To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw,
I should have forc'd thee soon with other arms. Milton.

With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,
To force their monarch, and insult the court. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To impel; to press; to draw or push by main strength.

Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them. Deuteronomy.

Stooping, the spear descended on his chine;
Just where the bone distinguish'd either loins:
It stuck so fast, so deeply bury'd lay,
That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away. Dryden's Æneid.

4. To enforce; to urge.

Three blust'ring nights, born by the southern blast,
I floated, and discover'd land at last:
High on a mounting wave my head I bore,
Forcing my strength, and gath'ring to the shore. Dryden's Æneid.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never fere,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forc'd fingers rude
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year. Milton.

5. To drive by violence or power.

This way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decay of Piety.

To free the ports, and ope the Punique land
To Trojan guests; left, ignorant of fate,
The queen might force them from her town and state. Dryden.

6. To gain by violence or power.

My heart is yours; but, oh! you left it here
Abandon'd to those tyrants hope and fear;
If they forc'd from me one kind look or word,
Could you not that, nor that small part afford?
Dryden.

7. To storm; to take or enter by violence.

Troy wall'd so high,
Atreides might as well have forc'd the sky. Waller.
Heav'n from all ages wisely did provide
This wealth, and for the bravest nation hide;
Who with four hundred foot, and forty horse,
Dare boldly go a new-found world to force.
Dryden's Ind. Emp.

8. To ravish; to violate by force.

Force her—I like it not. Dryden.

9. To constrain; to distort; not to obtain naturally or with ease.

Our general taste in England is for epigram, turns of wit, and forc'd conceits. Addison.

10. To man; to strengthen by soldiers; to garrison.

Here let them lye,
'Till famine and the ague eat them up:
Were they not forc'd with those that should be our's,
We might have met them darsful, beard to beard.
Shakspeare.

If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Oroonoke, and that the passages be already forc'd, then be well advis'd how you land. Raleigh's Apology.

11. To FORCE out. To extort.

The heat of the dispute had forc'd out from Luther expressions that seemed to make his doctrine run higher than really it did. Atterbury.

To FORCE. v. n. To lay stress upon—This word I have only found in the following passage.

That morning that he was to join battle with Harold, his armor put on his backpiece before and his breastplate behind; the which being espied by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advis'd him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries, but if I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change copy from a duke to a king. Camden's Remains.

FORCEDLY. adv. [from force.] Violently;
constrainedly; unnaturally.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forc'dly to the present form of the earth and the waters. Burnet's Theory.

FORCEFUL. adj. [force and full.] Violent; strong; driven with great might;
impetuous.

Why, what need we
Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forceful instigation? Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
Against the fixed he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.

Were it by chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be,
Assist'd by a friend, one moonless night,
This Palemon from prison took his flight. Dryd.

He poi'd in air, the jav'lin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went.
Pope.

FORCEFULLY. adv. [from forceful.]
Violently; impetuously.

FORCELESS. adj. [from force.] Having little force; weak; feeble; impotent.

FORCEPS. n. f. [Latin.]

Forceps properly signifies a pair of tongs; but is used for an instrument in chirurgery, to extract any thing out of wounds, and the like occasions. Quincy.

FORCER. n. f. [from force.]

1. That which forces, dries, or constrains.
2. The embolus of a pump working by pulsion, in contradistinction to a sucker, which acts by attraction.

The usual means for the ascent of water is either by suckers or forcers. Wilkins' Dædalus.

FORCIBLE. adj. [from force.]

1. Strong; mighty; opposed to weak.

That punishment, which hath been sometimes forcible to bridle sin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble. Hooker.

Who therefore can invent

With what more forcible we may offend

Our yet unwounded enemies? Milton.

2. Violent; impetuous.

Jersey, below'd by all; for all must feel
The influence of a form and mind,
Where comely grace and constant virtue dwell,
Like mingl'd streams, more forcible when join'd:
Jersey shall at thy altars stand,
Shall there receive the azure band. Prior.

3. Efficacious; active; powerful.

Sweet smells are most forcible in dry substances, when broken; and so likewise in oranges, the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon's Natural History.

4. Prevalent; of great influence.

How forcible are right words? Job.
God hath assured us, that there is no inclination or temptation to forcible which our humble prayers and desires may not frustrate and break afunder. Raleigh's History.

5. Done by force; suffered by force.

He swifter far,
Me overtook, his mother all dismay'd,
And in embraces forcible and foul Ingend'ring with me. Milton.

The abdication of king James, the advocates on that side look upon to have been forcible and unjust, and consequently void. Swift.

6. Valid; binding; obligatory.

FORCEIBLENESS. n. f. [from forcible.]
Force; violence.

FORCIBLY. adv. [from forcible.]

1. Strongly; powerfully.

The gospel offers such considerations as are fit to work very forcibly upon two of the most swaying and governing passions in the mind, our hopes and our fears. Tillotson.

2. Impetuously; with great strength.

3. By violence; by force.

He himself with greedy great desire
Into the castle enter'd forcibly. Fairy Queen.

The taking and carrying away of women forcibly, and against their will, except female wards and bondwomen, was made capital. Bacon.

This doctrine brings us down to the level of horse and mule, whose mouths are forcibly bidden with bit and bridle. Hammond.

FORCIPATED. adj. [from forceps.] Formed like a pair of pincers to open and enclose.

The locusts have antennæ, or long horns before, with a long salcation or forcipated tail behind. Brown.

When they have seized their prey, they will so tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters. Derham.

FORD. n. f. [ford, Saxon, from fapan, to pass.]

1. A shallow part of a river where it may be passed without swimming.

Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;

They pass the stream, when she had found the ford. Fairfax.

2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards

The ford, and of itself the water flies

All taste of living wight. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Rise, wretched widow! rise; nor undeplor'd

Permit my ghost to pass the Ayagian ford;

But rise, prepar'd in black to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

To FORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To pass without swimming.

Adam's thin-bones must have contained a thousand fathom, and much more, if he had forded the ocean. Raleigh's History.

Fording his current where thou find'st it low.

Denham.

FORDEABLE. adj. [from ford.] Passable without swimming.

Pliny placeth the Schenitz upon the Euphrates,
where the same beginneth in be fordable. Raleigh.

A countryman founded a river up and down, to try where it was most fordable; and where the water ran too smooth, he found it deepest; and, on the contrary, shallowest where it made most noise. L'Estrange.

FORE. adj. [pone, Saxon.]

1. Anterior; that which is before; not behind.

Though there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they move strongest and go farthest in the fore lines from the first local impression.
Bacon.

2. That which comes first in a progressive motion.

Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them. Chymer.

FORE. adv.

1. Anteriorly; in the part which appears first to those that meet it.

Each of them will bear six demiculverins and four sakers, needing no other addition than a slight spar deck fore and aft, which is a slight deck throughout. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Fore is a word much used in composition to mark priority of time, of which some examples shall be given. A vitious orthography has confounded for and fore
in composition.

To FOREADVISE. v. n. [fore and advise.]

To counsel early; to counsel before the time of action, or the event.

Thus to have said,

As you were foreadvise'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And tried his inclination. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

To FOREAPPOINT. v. n. [fore and appoint.] To order beforehand.

To FOREARM. v. a. [fore and arm.] To provide for attack or resistance before the time of need.

A man should fix and forearm his mind with this persuasion, that, during his passion, whatever is offered to his imagination tends only to deceive. South.

He forearms his care

With rules to push his fortune, or to bear.

Dryden's Ænoid.

To FOREBODE. v. n. [fore and bode.]

1. To prognosticate; to foretell.

An ancient augur, skill'd in future fate,
With these foreboding words retracts their hate.

Dryden.

2. To foreknow; to be prescient of; to feel a secret sense of something future.

Fate makes you deaf, while I in vain implore;
My heart forebodes I ne'er shall see you more.

Dryden.

My soul foreboded I should find the bow'r

Of some fell monster, fierce with barbarous pow'r.

Boyle.

FOREBODER. n. f. [from forebode.]

1. A prognosticator; a soothsayer.

Your raven has a reputation in the world for a bird of omen, and a kind of small prophet: a crow that had observed the raven's manner and way of delivering his predictions, sets up for a foreboder. L'Estrange.

2. A foreknower.

FOREBY. prep. [fore and by.] Near; hard by; fast by.

Not far away he hence doth won

To FORECAST. v. a. [fore and cast.]

1. To scheme; to plan before execution.
He shall forecast his devices against the strong holds. Daniel.

2. To adjust; to contrive antecedently.
The feast was serv'd; the time so well forecast,
That just when the dessert and fruits were plac'd,
The fiend's alarm began. Dryden.

3. To foresee; to provide against.
It is wisdom to consider the end of things before we embark, and to forecast consequences. L'Estrange.

To FORECAST. v. n. To form schemes; to contrive beforehand.

And whatso heavens in their secret doom
Ordnaind have, now can frail fleshy wight
Forecast, but it must needs to issue come? Spenser.

When broad awake, the finds in troublous slit, Forecasting how his foe he might annoy. F. Queen.

FORECAST. n. f. [from the verb.] Contrivance beforehand; scheme; plan; antecedent policy.

Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,
But while he thought to steal the single ten,
The king was slyly finger'd from the deck! Shakespeare's Henry vi.

He makes this difference to arise from the forecast and predetermination of the gods. Addison on Medals.

The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpless him from whom their life began:
Memory and forecast just returns engage;
That pointed back to youth, this on to age. Pope.

FORECASTER. n. f. [from forecast.] One who contrives beforehand.

FORECASTLE. n. f. [fore and castle.] In a ship, is that part where the foremast stands, and is divided from the rest of the floor by a bulkhead: that part of the forecastle which is aloft, and not in the hold, is called the prow. Harris.

The commodity of the new cook-room the merchants have found to be so great, as that, in all their ships, the cook-rooms are built in their fore-castles, contrary to that which had been anciently us'd. Raleigh's Essays.

FORECHOSEN. part. [fore and chosen] Pre-elected.

FORECITED. part. [fore and cite.] Quoted before, or above.

Greaves is of opinion, that the alteration mentioned in that forecited passage is continued. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To FORECLOSE. v. a. [fore and close.]

1. To shut up; to preclude; to prevent.
The embargo with Spain foreclosed this trade. Carver.

2. To FORECLOSE a Mortgage, is to cut off the power of redemption.

FOREDECK. n. f. [fore and deck.] The anterior part of the ship.

I to the foredeck went, and thence did look For rocky Scylla. Chapman's Odyssey.

To FOREDESIGN. v. a. [fore and design.] To plan beforehand.

All the steps of the growth and vegetation both of animals and plants, have been foreseen and fore-designed by the wise Author of nature. Cheyne.

To FOREDO. v. a. [from for and do, not fore.]

1. To ruin; to destroy. A word obsolete. Opposed to making happy.

Befeeching him, if either salves or oils,
A foredone wight from door of death might raise,
He would at her request prolong her nephew's days. Fairy Queen.

That drew on men God's hatred and his wrath,
And many souls in dolours had foredone. F. Queen.

This doth betoken,
The corse they follow did with desperate hand
Foredo its own life. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

This is the night
That either makes me, or foredoes me quite. Shakespeare.

2. To overdo; to weary; to harass.
Whilst the heavy plowman snears,
All with weary talk foredone. Shakespeare.

To FOREDOOM. v. a. [fore and doom.]

To predestinate; to determine beforehand.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium, and the realms foredoom'd by Jove. Dryden's Æneid.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease: if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Ægæan state. Dryden.

Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend
By course of time to their appointed end. Dryden.

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

FORE-END. n. f. [fore and end.] The anterior part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven than in all
The fore-end of my time. Shakespeare.

In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm. Baron.

FOREFATHER. n. f. [fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge. Hooker.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor. Raleigh's History.

Conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief: mine is not so. Shaks.

Shall I not be distraught,
And madly play with my forefathers joints. Shakespeare.

Our great forefathers,
Had left him nought to conquer but his country. Addison.

When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way. Addison.

Blest peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace
Reflecting, and reflected in his race. Pope.

To FOREFEND. v. a. [It is doubtful whether from fore or for and defend. If from fore, it implies antecedent provision; as forearm: if from for, prohibitory security; as forbid. Of the two following examples one favours for, and the other fore.]

1. To prohibit; to avert.
I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heav'n's forefend! I would not kill thy soul. Shakespeare.

Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefend,
May bring your youth to some untimely end. Dryden.

2. To provide for; to secure.

Down with the nose,
Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away
Of him, that, his particular to forefend, Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shakespeare.

FOREFINGER. n. f. [fore and finger.] The finger next to the thumb; the index.

An agate stone
On the forefinger of an alderman. Shakespeare.

Polymnia shall be drawn, as it were, acting her speech with her forefinger. Peacham.

Some wear this on the middle-finger, as the antient Gauls and Britons; and some upon the fore-finger. Brown.

FOREFOOT. n. f. plur. forefeet. [fore and foot.] The anterior foot of a quadruped: in contempt, a hand.

Give me thy fist, thy forefoot to me give. Shakespeare.

He ran fiercely, and smote at Heliodorus with his forefeet. 2 Maccabees.

I continue my line from thence to the last;
then making the breast with the eminency thereof,
bring out his near forefoot, which I finish. Peacham.

To FOREGO. v. a. [fore and go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.
Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?

If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither fore-given nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser.

He is a great adventurer, said he,
That bath his sword through hard essay foregone;
And now hath vowed 'till he avenged be
Of that despite, never to wearen none. F. Queen.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master? Shaks.

Let us not forego
That for a trifle which was bought with blood. Shakespeare.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods solitary! Milton.

This argument might prevail with you to forego
a little of your repose for the publick benefit. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another;
and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should forego a present enjoyment. Lect.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not. Shakespeare.

It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone and when his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch. Raleigh.

Reflect upon the two foregoing objections. Boyle on Colours.

This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitation pleases. Dryden's Desires.

I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations. Addison.

In the foregoing part of this work I promised proofs. Woodward.

3. To lose.

This is the very ecstacy of love,
Whose violent property foregoes itself,
And leads the will to desperate undertakings. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

FOREGOER. n. f. [from forego.] Ancestor; progenitor.

Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive Than our forefathers. Shakspeare.

FO'REGROUND. n. f. [fore and ground.]
The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can subsist on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed to be in an open field. Dryden.

FO'REHAND. n. f. [fore and hand.]

1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.

2. The chief part. Not in use.

The great Achilles whom opinion crowns
The finew and the forehead of our host. Shakspeare.

FO'REHAND. adj. Done sooner than is regular.

You'll say she did embrace me as a husband,
And so exculpate the forehead sin. Shakspeare.

FO'REHAND. adj. [from fore and hand.]

1. Early; timely.

If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forehead care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. Formed in the foreparts.

He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely foreheaded: mark but the cleanness of his shapes too. Dryden.

FO'REHEAD. n. f. [fore and head.]

1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breath of Hecuba,

When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakspeare.

Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And moulded ev'ry feature from my face:

Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes.

Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity. The forehead is the part on which shame visibly operates.

A man of confidence preffeth forward upon every appearance of advantage; where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions. Collier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply.

Swift's Presbyterian Plea.

FOREHO'Lding. n. f. [fore and bold.]

Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.

How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits with the fancy of omens, foreheadings, and old wives tales! L'Estrange.

FO'REIGN. adj. [forain, French; foraino, Spanish; from foris, Latin.]

1. Not of this country; not domestick.

Your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home. Shakspeare.

The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts.

The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domestick and foreign writers.

Atterbury.

The parties and divisions amongst us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy.

Addison's Freeholder.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,

And speak a language foreign to my heart.

Addison's Cato.

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition.

Addison.

This design is not foreign from some peoples thoughts.

Swift.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not stick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him,

That he ran mad and died. Shakspeare. Hen. VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

There are who, fondly flusterous of increase,
Rich foreign mould in their ill-natur'd land Induce. Philips.

FO'REIGNER. n. f. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham's Sophy.

To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong'd a friend, a kinsman, and a son.

Dryden's Ænoid.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch; but the lemons, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs are all foreigners.

Addison.

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects.

Swift.

FO'REIGNNESS. n. f. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right.

Luttrell.

TO FOREIMAGINE. v. a. [fore and imagine.] To conceive or fancy before proof.

We are within compass of a foreimagined possibility in that behalf.

Camden's Remains.

TO FOREJUDGE. v. a. [fore and judge.]

To judge beforehand; to be prepossessioned; to prejudge.

TO FOREKNOW. v. a. [fore and know.]

To have precience of; to foresee.

We foreknow that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after winter the spring shall come; after the spring, summer and harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those.

Raleigh.

He foreknew John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave in peace.

Brewer.

Calchas the sacred seer, who had in view Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew.

Dryden's Iliad.

Who would the miseries of man foreknow?
Not knowing, we but share our part of woe.

Dryden.

FOREKNOWABLE. adj. [from foreknow.]

Possible to be known before they happen.

It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances.

Mor.

FOREKNOWLEDGE. n. f. [fore and knowledge.] Precience; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge, saveth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world.

Hooker.

I told him you was asleep: he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore chafes to speak with you.

Shakspeare.

If I foreknew,

Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault;
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown:

Johnson.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason that you do not dislike my letters.

Pope.

FO'RELAND. n. f. [fore and land.] A promontory; headland; high land jutting into the sea; a cape.

As when a ship, by skilful steersman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft he steers, and thence her sails.

Milton.

TO FORELAY. v. a. [fore and lay.]

1. To lay wait for; to entrap by ambush.

A serpent shoots his sting at unawares;
An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller:
The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake,
One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake.

Dryden.

2. To contrive antecedently.

TO FO'RELIFT. v. a. [fore and lift.] To raise aloft any anterior part.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast;
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of his new comen guest.

Spenser.

FO'RELOCK. n. f. [fore and lock.] The hair that grows from the forepart of the head.

Tell her the joyous time will not be staid,
Unless she do him by the forelock take.

Spenser.

Hyacinthine locks,

Round from his parted forelock manly hung,

Clust'ring, but not beneath his shoulders broad.

Milton.

Zeal and duty are not flow,

But on occasion's forelock watchful wait.

Milton.

Time is painted with a lock before, and bald behind, signifying thereby that we must take time by the forelock; for, when it is once past, there is no recalling it.

Swift.

FO'REMAN. n. f. [fore and man.] The first or chief person.

He is a very sensible man, shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury.

Addison's Spectator.

FOREMENTIONED. adj. [fore and mentioned.] Mentioned or recited before.

The greatest parts of the body ought to appear foremost; and he forbids the foreshortenings, because they make the parts appear little. Dryden.

TO FO'RESHOW. v. a. [fore and show.]

1. To discover before it happens; to predict; to prognosticate.
Christ had called him to be a witness of his death, and resurrection from the dead, according to that which the prophets and Moses had fore-shown. Hooker.

Next, like Aurora, Spenser rose,
Whose purple blush the day foreshows. Dryden.
You chose to withdraw yourself from publick business, when the face of heaven grew troubled, and the frequent shifting of the wind foreshowed a storm. Dryden.

2. To represent before it comes.
What else is the law but the gospel foreshown?
What other the gospel than the law fulfilled? Hooker.

FO'RESIGHT. n. f. [fore and sight.]

1. Prescience; prognostication; foreknowledge. 'The accent anciently on the last syllable.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below; while thou to foresight wak'st:
As once thou sleep'st, woulst the to life was form'd. Milton.

2. Provident care of futurity.
He had a sharp foresight, and working wit,
That never idle was, no once could rest a whit. Spenser.

In matters of arms he was both skilful and industrious, and as well in foresight as resolution, present and great. Hayward.

Difficulties and temptations will more easily be born or avoided, if with prudent foresight we arm ourselves against them. Rogers.

FORESIGHTFUL. adj. [foresight and full.]

Prescient; provident.
Death gave him no such pangs as the foresightful care he had of his silly successor. Sidney.

TO FORESIGNIFY. v. a. [fore and signify.]

To betoken beforehand; to forebode; to typify.

Discoveries of Christ already present, whose future coming the Psalms did but foresignify. Hooker.

Yet as being past times noxious, where they light

On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent
They oft foresignify, and threaten ill. Milton.

FO'RESKIN. n. f. [fore and skin.] The prepuce.

Their own hand
An hundred of the faithless for shall slay,
And for a dow'r thy hundred foreskins pay,
Be Michol thy reward. Cowley's Davidean.

FO'RESKIRT. n. f. [fore and skirt.] The pendulous or loose part of the coat before.

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
No other obligation?
That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his foreskirt. Shakespeare.

TO FO'RESLACK. v. a. [fore and slack.]

To neglect by idleness.
It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion foreslack'd, that might have been the eternal good of the land. Spenser's State of Ireland.

TO FORESLOW. v. a. [fore and slow.]

1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.

Nothcam, no wood, no mountain could foreslow
Their hasty pace. Fairfax.

Now the illustrious nymph return'd again,
Brings every grace triumphant in her train:
The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm, Foreslow'd her passage to behold her form. Dryden.

2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assail them. Race's Henry VII.

Our good purposes foreslowed are become our tormentors upon our death-bed. Ejebod Hall.

Chrones, how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats and use their nets aright,
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreflow?
Some such have been: but ah! by tempests' spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan
That few were such, and now these few are none.
P. Fletcher.

To FORESLOW. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing
breasts,

For yet is hope of life and victory:

Foreflow no longer make we hence amain Shaksp.

To FORESPEAK. v. n. [fore and speak.]

1. To predict; to foresay; to foreshow; to foretell.

Old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names. Camden's Rem.

2. To forbid. [from for and speak.]

Thou hast forespoke my being in these wars,
And say'st it is not so. Shaksp.

FORESPENT. adj. [for and spent.]

1. Wasted; tired; spent.

After him came spurring hard

A gentleman, almost forespent with speed. Shaksp.

2. Forepassed; past. [fore and spent.]

Is not enough thy evil life forespent? E. Queen.

You shall find his vanities forespent,

Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,

Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shaksp.

3. Bestowed before.

We must receive him

According to the honour of his sender;

And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,

We must extend our notice. Shaksp.

FORESPURRER. n. f. [fore and spur.]

One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,

To show how costly summer was at hand,

As this forespurrer comes before his lord. Shaksp.

FOREST. n. f. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker.

Macheth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunfinane's high hill Shall come against him.

—That will never be:

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree

Unfix his earth-bound root. Shaksp.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champains, but grafting, and not overgrown with beath; or else timber-shades, as in forests.
Bacon.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head.

Roscommon

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure.

The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, and the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agitors, regarders, bailiffs, and beodles. The chief property of a forest is the swaimote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pypowders to a fair. Cowell.

To FORESTALL. v. a. [fore and stall, Saxon.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech; do not forestall
By lavishness thine own and others wit,
As if thou mad'st thy will. Herbert.

What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would mull avoid.

Milton.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like misbap forestall.

Fairy Queen.

What 's in prayer, but this twofold force
To be forestalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being down. Shaksp.

Hamlet.

But for my tears,

I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,

Ere you with grief had spoke. Shaksp.

If thou covest death, as utmost end

Of misery, so thinking to evade

The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God

Hath witcher arm'd his vengeful ire, than so

To be forestall'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I will not forestall your judgment of the rest.

Pope.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

He bold spake, fir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestall'd place at erit,

For fear of further harm, I counsel thee. F. Queen.

4. To deprive by something prior: with of. Not in use.

May

This night forestall him of the coming day. Shaksp.

FORESTALLER. n. f. [from forestall.] One that anticipates the market; one that purchases before others to raise the price.

Commodities, good or bad, the workman must take at his matter's rate, or sit still and starve; whilst, by this means, this new sort of ingrossers or forestallers having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

FORESTBORN. adj. [forest and born.]

Born in a wild.

This boy is forestborn,
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of desperate studies. Shaksp.

Henry VI.

FORESTER. n. f. [forester, French; from forest.]

1. An officer of the forest.

Forester, my friend, where is the bush,
That we stand and play the murderer in?

—Here by, upon the edge of yonder coppice.

Shaksp.

2. An inhabitant of the wild country.

FORESWAT. } adj. [from for and swat,
FORESWART. } from sweat.] Spent with heat.

Miso and Mopsa, like a couple of foreswart
melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney.

To FORETASTE. v. a. [fore and taste.]

1. To have antepast of; to have prescience of.

Perhaps the fact

Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit,

Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first

Made common and unhallow'd, ere our taste.

Milton.

FORETASTE. n. f. Anticipation of.

A pleasure that a man may call as properly his own as his soul and his conscience, neither liable to accident, nor exposed to injury: it is the foretaste of heaven, and the earnest of eternity. South.

To FORETELL. v. a. preter. and part. pass. foretold. [fore and tell.]

1. To predict; to prophesy.

What art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?

Shaksp.

Henry VI.

I found

The new-created world, which came in heaven

Long had foretold. Milton.

Mercia's king,

Warn'd in a dream, his murder did foretell,

From point to point, as after it befell. Dryden.

When great Ulysses sought the Phrygian shores,

Deeds then undone my faithful tongue foretold;

Heaven seal'd my words, and you those deeds behold. Pope.

2. To foretoken; to foreshow.

To FORETELL. v. n. To utter prophecy.

All the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, have likewise foretold of these days. Acts.

FORETELLER. n. f. [from foretell.] Pre-dicter; forehower.

Others are proposed, not that the foretold event should be known; but that the accomplishments that expounds them may evince, that the foreteller of them was able to foresee thee. Boyle on Colours.

To FORETHINK. v. a. [fore and think.]

1. To anticipate in the mind; to have prescience of.

The soul of every man
Prophetically does forethink thy fall. Shaksp.

I do pray to thee,

Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom

Forethought by heav'n. Shaksp.

King John.

Adam could not be ignorant of the punishments due to neglect and disobedience; and felt,

by the proof thereof, in himself another terror

than he had forethought, or could imagine. Raleigh.

Friday, the fatal day! when next it came,

Her soul forethought the fiend would change his game. Dryden.

2. To contrive antecedently.

Blessed be that God which hath given you an heart to forethink this, and a will to honour him with his own. Bishop Hall.

To FORETHINK. v. n. To contrive beforehand.

What's my frenzy will be call'd my crime:
What then is thine? Thou cool deliberate villain!
Thou wilt, forethinking, weighing politician!

Smith.

FORETHOUGHT. n. f. [from forethink.]

1. Prescience; anticipation.

He that is undone, is equally undone, whether it be by spitefulness of forethought, or by the folly of oversight, or evil council. L'Estrange.

2. Provident care.

To FORETOKEN. v. a. [fore and token.]

To foreshow; to prognosticate as a sign.

The king from Ireland hastes; but did no good;

Whilst strange prodigious signs foretold blood.

Daniel.

FORETOKEN. n. f. [from the verb.] Prevenient sign; prognostick.

It may prove some ominous foretold of misfortune. Sidney.

They misliked nothing more in king Edward the Confessor, than that he was Frenchified, and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretold of bringing in of foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden's Remains.

FORETOOTH. n. f. [fore and tooth.] The tooth in the anterior part of the mouth; the incisor.

The foreteeth should be formed broad, and with a thin sharp edge like chizzles. Ray.

FORRETOP. n. f. [fore and top.] That part of a woman's headdress that is forward, or the top of a periwig.

So may your hats foretops never press,
Untouch'd your ribbons, sacred be your drefs. Dryden.

FOREVOUCHED. part. [fore and vouch.] Affirmed before; formerly told.

Sure her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it; or your forevouch'd affection Fall'n into taint. Shaksp. King Lear.

FORWARD. n. f. [fore and ward.] The van; the front.

They that marched in the foreward were all mighty men. Maccabees.

TO FOREWARN. v. a. [fore and warn.]

1. To admonish beforehand.

I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell. Luke.

2. To inform previously of any future event.

Divine interpreter, by favour sent Down from the empyrean, to forewarn
Us timely of what might else have been our loss.
Unknown. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To caution against any thing beforehand.

Well I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd.
Shakspere's Henry vi.

Thy pride,
And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
Rejected my forewarning, and disdain'd
Not to be trusted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Tho' Phœbus had forewarned him of finging wars, yet the fear of nature was free. Dryden.

Young Chærebus, who by love was led,
To win renown and fair Cassandra's bed,
Had lately brought his troops to Priam's aid;
Forewarn'd in vain by the prophetic maid. Dry.

TO FOREWASTE. v. n. [fore and waste.]

To desolate; to destroy. Out of use.
Vespasian, with great spoil and rage,
Forewasted all, until gemilla gent Persuaded him to cease. Fairy Queen.

High time 'gan it wex for Una fair,
To think of those her captive parents dear,
And their forewasted kingdom to repair. Fairy Q.

TO FOREWEARY. v. a. [for and weary.]

To dispirit with labour.
By your toil
And labour long, through which ye hither came,
Ye both forewearied be: therefore a while
I read you rest, and to your bowers recoil. Fairy Queen.

TO FOREWISH. v. a. [fore and wish.] To desire beforehand.

The wiser sort ceased not to what in them lay,
to procure that the good commonly forewished might in time come to effect. Kneller.

FOREWORN. part. [fore and worn, from wear.] Worn out; wasted by time or use.

Neither the light was enough to read the words, and the ink was already foreworn, and in many places blotted. Sidney.

FORFEIT. n. f. [forfait, Fr. forfeit, Welsh.]

1. Something lost by the commission of a crime; something paid for expiation of a crime; a fine; a mulct.

Thy slander I forgive, and therewithal Remit thy other forfeits. Shakspere.

Th' execution leave to high disposal,
And let another hand, not thine, cast
Thy penal forfeits from thyself. Milton.

Thy life, Melantius! I am come to take,
Of which foul treason does a forfeit make. Wal.

2. A person obnoxious to punishment; one whose life is forfeited by his offence. Now obsolete.

Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words. Shakspere.
Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. Shakspere.

TO FORFEIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To lose by some breach of condition; to lose by some offence.

If then a man, on light conditions, gain
A great estate to him, and his, for ever;
If wilfully he forfeit it again,
Who doth bemoan his heir, or blame the giver? Davies.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited
all right to happiness. Boyle.

A father cannot alien the power he has over his child: he may perhaps to some degree forfeit it, but cannot transfer it. Locke.

FORFEIT. participial adj. [from the verb.]

Liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime; lost either as to the right or possession, by breach of conditions.

All the souls that are, were forfeit once;
And he that might the 'vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy. Shakspere.

Beg that thou may'st leave to hang thyself;
And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord. Shaksp.

This now scenceless world,
Forfeit to death. Milton.

Straight all his hopes exhal'd in empty smoke,
And his long toils were forfeit for a look. Dryd.
Methought with wondrous ease he (swallow'd
down

His forfeit honour, to betray the town. Dryden.
How the murderer paid his forfeit breath;
What lands so distant from that scene of death,
But trembling heard the fame! Pope's Odyssey.

FORFEITABLE. adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.

FORFEITURE. n. f. [forfeiture, French; from forfeit.]

1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.

2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.

The court is as well a Chancery to save and debar forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Bacon's War with Spain.

Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

He fairly abdicates his throne,
He has a forfeiture incur'd. Swift.

FORGAVE. The preterit of forgive.

FORGE. n. f. [forge, French.]

1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.

Now behold,
In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens. Shakspere's Henry v.

In other part stood one, who at the forge
Labouring, two massy cloths of iron and brass
Had melted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Th' o'er labour'd Cyclop from his task retires,
Th' Æolian forge exhausted of its fires. Pope.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.

From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hooker.

3. Manufacture of metalline bodies; the act of working.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious and obedient to the stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, and moulded. Bacon.

TO FORGE. v. a. [forger, old French.]

1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.

The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg'd of gold,
Must needs have golden furniture. Chapman.

Tyger with tyger, bear with bear you'll find
In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;
But lawless man the anvil dares profane,
And forge that steel by which a man is slain,
Which earth at first for plough-shares did afford,
Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword. Tate's Juvenal.

2. To make by any means.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
'Till he had forg'd himself a name i' th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shakspere's Coriolanus.
His heart's his mouth:
What his breath forges, that his tongue must vent. Shakspere.

Those names that the schools forgerd, and put into the mouths of scholars, could never get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

3. To counterfeit; to falsify.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
For my more having would be but as sauce
To make me hunger more, that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth. Shakspere.

FORGER. n. f. [from forge.]

1. One who makes or forms.

2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.

As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves: so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer forgers of libels. Government of the Tongue.

No forger of lies willingly and whittlingly furnishes out the means of his own detection. West on the Resurrection.

FORGERY. n. f. [from forge.] The crime of falsification.

Has your king married the lady Gray?
And now, to south your forgery and his,
Sends me a paper to peruse me patience. Shakspere's Henry vi.

Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts had they been false, to have shewn their falshood, and to have convicted them of forgery. Stephens's Sermons.

A forgery, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books sold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift.

2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.

He ran on embattled armies clad in iron,
And weaponless himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,

Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail Adamantean proof. Milton's Agonistes.

TO FORGET. v. a. preter. forgot; part. forgotten or forgot. [forpytan, Saxon; vergeten, Dutch.]

1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.

That is not forgot

Which ne'er I did remember to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him. Shakspeare.

When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
A sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard. Shakspeare.

Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches. Ecclus.

No sooner was our deliverance compleated, but we forgot our danger and our duty. Asterbury.

Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yes, they may forget; yet I will not forget thee.

Isaiah.

If we might forget ourselves, or forget God;
If we might disregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing, at every time, and every place. Law.

The mass of mean forgotten things. Amos.

FORGETFUL. adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.

2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their punishments and penance last,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood,
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours, and their irksome years.

Dryden's Euclid.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers.

Hebrews.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Have you not love to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,

Makes me forgetful? Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

I, in fact, a real interest have,
Which to my own advantage I would save;
And, with the usual courtier's trick, intend
To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

FORGETFULNESS. n. f. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!

Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Shaksp.

All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep steals away

The wild desires of men and toils of day;
And brings, descending through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously enaged with forgetfulness of her duty. Halker.

FORGETIVE. adj. [from forge.] That may forge or produce. A word, I believe, peculiar to Shakspeare.

Good herie lack ascends me into the brain, dris me there all the foolish, dull vapours, makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble shapes, which, delivered to the voice, becomes excellent wit. Shakspeare.

FORGETTER. n. f. [from forget.]

1. One that forgets.

2. A careless person.

To FORGIVE. v. a. pret. for gave; part. pass. forgiven. [conjugan, Sax.]

1. To pardon a person; not to punish.

Then heaven for-give him too! Shakspeare.

I do beseech your grace for charity;

If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now for-give me frankly.

—Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free for-give you,

As I would be for-given: I for-give all. Shaksp.

Slowly provok'd, she easily for-gives. Prior.

VOL. I.

2. To pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity. Isaiah

If prayers

Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard,
That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty and infirmities forgiven,
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milton.

3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and for-gave him the debt.

Matthew.

FORGIVENESS. n. f. [conjugan, Sax.]

1. The act of forgiving.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and for-givenesses. Daniel.

2. Pardon of an offender.

Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee.

Prayer of Manass.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's death come not upon thee,
Nor thine on me. Shakspeare.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;

But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong.

Dryden.

3. Pardon of an offence.

God has certainly promised forgiveness of sin to every one who repents. South.

4. Tenderness; willingness to pardon.

Here are introduced more heroic principles of meekness, forgiveness, bounty and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent.

Spratt.

Mercy above did hourly plead

For her resemblance here below;

And mild forgiveness intercede

To stop the coming blow. Dryden.

5. Remission of a fine, penalty, or debt.

FORGIVER. n. f. [from forgive.] One who pardons.

FORGOT. } [part. pass. of forget.]

FORGOTTEN. } Not remembered.

This song shall not be forgotten. Deut.

Great Stratford! worthy of that name, though all

Of thee could be forgotten, but thy fall. Denk.

The soft ideas of the cheerful note,

Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot. Prior.

To FORHAUL. v. a. [An old word. Pro- bably for forhaul, from for and haul.]

To harass, tear, torment.

All this long tale

Nought eases the care that doth me for-hail.

Spenser's Pastorals.

FORK. n. f. [furca, Latin; forch, Welsh; fourche, French.]

1. An instrument divided at the end into two or more points or prongs, used on many occasions.

At midsummer down with the brambles and brakes,

And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes.

Tupper.

The vicar first, and after him the crew,
With forks and flaves the felon to pursue,

Ran Coll our dog. Dryden's Nun's Priest.

I dine with forks that have but two prongs.

Swift.

2. It is sometimes used for the point of an arrow.

The bow is bent and drawn: make from the shaft.

—Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart. Shaksp. K. Lear.

3. A point.

Several are amazed at the wisdom of the ancients that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, burning, and melting. Addison on Metals.

To FORK. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into blades, as corn does out of the ground.

The corn beginneth to fork. Mortimer.

FORKED. adj. [from fork.] Opening into two or more parts.

Naked he was, for all the world, like a forked
radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife. Shakspeare.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shaksp.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?

And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools

Should in their own confines, with forked heads,

Have their round haunches goar'd. Shaksp.

He would have spoke;

But hifs for hifs return'd, with forked tongue

To forked tongue. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Ye dragons, whose contagious breath

Peoples the dark retreats of death,

Change your fierce hissing into joyful song,

And praise your Maker with your forked tongue.

Reverend.

FORKEDLY. adv. [from forked.] In a forked form.

FORKEDNESS. n. f. [from forked.] The quality of opening into two parts or more.

FORKHEAD. n. f. [fork and head.] Point of an arrow.

It seizing, no way enter might;
But back rebounding, left the forkhead keen,

Edgewise it fled away, and might no where be seen. Fairy Queen.

FORKEY. adj. [from fork.] Forked; fur- cated; opening into two parts.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;

Pleas'd the green hilt of the scales survey,

And with their forky tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope's Messiah.

FORLORE. [The preterit and participle of the Saxon forleopan, in Dutch verloren.]

Deferted; forsook; forsaken. Obsolete.

Such as Diana by the sandy shore

Of swift Eurytos, or on Cynthus' green,

Where all the nymphs have her forlore. Fairy Q.

That wretched world he 'gan for to abhor,

And mortal life 'gan hate, as thing forlore.

Fairy Queen.

Thus fell the trees, with noise the deferts roar;

The beasts their caves, the birds their nests forlore.

Fairfax.

FORLORN. adj. [conjugan, from forleopan, Saxon; verloren, Dutch.]

1. Deferted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for that they want to scorn;
Of fortune and of hope at once forloren. Hubb. Tale.

Tell me, good Hubinot, what gars thee greet?

What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?

Or is thy baggage broke, that sounds so sweet?

Or art thou of thy loved lass forloren? Spenser.

In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing shewed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forloren.

Knots' History.

How can I live without thee! how forego

Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,

To live again in these wild woods forloren! Mil.

Their way

Lies through the perplex'd paths of this dear

wood;

The nodding horror of whose shady brows,

Threats the forloren and wand'ring passenger.

Milton.

My only strength and stay! forloren of thee,

Whither shall I betake me, where submit? Milton.

Like a declining statesman, left forloren

To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Denham.

The good old man, forloren of human aid,

For vengeance to his heav'nly patron pray'd.

Dryden's Fanny.

Philomel laments forlorn. Penton.

As some sad turtle his lost love deplores,
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, un pity'd, and forlorn. Pope.

2. Taken away. This sense shows that it is the participle of an active verb, now lost.

When as night hath us of light forlorn,
I wish that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.
What is become of great Aercates' son!

Or where hath he hung up his mortal blade,
That hath so many haughty conquests won?
Is all his force forlorn, and all his glory done?

Fairy Queen.

3. Small; despicable: in a ludicrous sense.

He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick fight were invincible. Shakspeare's Hen. iv.

FORLOREN. n. f.

1. A lost, solitary, forsaken man.

Henry

Is of a king become a banish'd man,
And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn. Shakspeare.

2. FORLOREN Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed to perish.

Criticks in plume,
Who killing on our foremost branches sit,
And still charge first, the true forlorn of wit.

Dryden.

FORLO'RNNESS. n. f. [from forlorn.]
Destitution; misery; solitude.

Mendispleased God, and consequently forfeited
all right to happiness; even whilst they compleated the forlornness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

TO FORLIE. v. n. [from fore and lie.]
To lie before.

Knit with a golden baldric, which forlay
Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide
Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,
Now little 'gan to swell; and being ty'd,
Through her thin weed, their places only signified. Fairy Queen.

FORM. n. f. [forma, Latin; forme, French.]

1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too,
—Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,

Which are as easy broke as they make forms.

Shakspeare.

It stood still; but I could not discern the form

Job.

Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form.

Grew's Cosmod. Sac.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no gift. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispus'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. Shakspeare's Hen. v. 111.
Here toils and death, and death's half-brother,
Sleep,

Form terrible to view, their sentry keep;
With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
Deep frauds before, and open force behind.

Dryden's Æneid.

3. Particular model or modification.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.

It lengthens our every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.

He hath no form nor comeliness. Isaiah.

5. Regularity; method; order.

What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.

Then those whom form of laws

Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.

They were young heirs sent only for forms from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rites.

Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r
Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakspeare.

A long table, and a square table, or a seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business;
but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors opinions that sit lower. Bacon's Eff.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass, that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes.

Devies.

Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms.

Clarendon.

How am I to interpret, fir, this visit?
Is it a compliment of form, or love? A. Philips.

8. Stated method; established practice; ritual and prescribed mode.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even to the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hooker.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flatter and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Not seek to know

Their process, or the forms of law below.

Dryden's Æneid.

9. A long seat.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back.

Watts's Logic.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakspeare.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden.

11. The seat or bed of a hare.

Now for a clod like hare in form thy peer;
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;
Now the ambitious lark, with mirror clear,
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidney.

Have you observ'd a sitting hare,
Litt'ning, and fearful of the storm
Of horns and howls, clap back her ear,
Afsaid to keep or leave her form. Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form did adjoin itself.

Hooker.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

TO FORM. v. a. [formo, Latin.]

1. To make out of materials.

God formed man of the dust of the ground.

Genesis.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought

Fused, or grav'n in metal. Milton.

Determin'd to advance into our room

A creature form'd of earth. Milton.

She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air.

Pope.

2. To model to a particular shape or state.

Creature in whom excell'd
Whatever can to fight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet. Milton.
Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to foresight wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life was form'd. Milton.

3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.

Lucretius taught him not to form his heroes,
to give him piety or valour for his manners.

Dryden's Æneid, Dedication.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner: as, he formed his troops.

5. To adjust; to settle.

Our differences with the Romanists are thus formed into an interest, and become the design not of single persons, but of corporations and successions. Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.

The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions formed for promoting it. Decay of Piety.

He dies too soon;

And fate, if possible, must he delay'd:
The thought that labours in my forming brain,
Yet crude and immature, demands more time.

Rowe.

7. To model by education or institution.

Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not:
Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind.

Dryden's Virgil.

FORMAL. adj. [formel, Fr. formalis, Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation.

The justice,

In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakspeare.

Formal in apparel,

In gait and countenance surely like a father.

Shakspeare.

Ceremonies he not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish
the credit of him that speaks. Bacon.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden;
not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemies of human society, to as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pirates. Bacon.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And he that on their changes looks,
Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice:
The formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Held's Elements of Speech.

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillingfleet.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristic; regular; proper.

Thou shou'dst come like a fury cover'd with snakes,
Not like a formal man. Shakespeare.

I will not let him stir,
'Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again. Shaksp.

FORMALIST. n. f. [formaliste, French; from form.] One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satire to persons of judgment, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficies to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon.

A grave, staunch, skillfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a fly formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South.

FORMALITY. n. f. [formalité, French; from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hoggar.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estrange.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.

If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The baselard's perjury, and fix the shame. Dry.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all fat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the impotence of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glanville's Sceptis.

4. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pounds to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillingfleet.

TO FORMALIZE. v. a. [formaliser, Fr. from formal. A word not now in use.]

1. To model; to modify.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalise, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker.

2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

FORMALLY. adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies, or rites.

Formally, according to our law,
Depose him. Shakespeare's Richard II.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorized guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. South.

The heathens and the christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Swalbridge.

FORMATION. n. f. [formation, French; from formo, Latin.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of volcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus. Arbuthnot.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown.

FORMATIVE. adj. [from formo, Latin.]

Having the power of giving form; plastic.

As we have established our assertion of the seminal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley's Sermons.

FORMER. n. f. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray.

FORMER. adj. [from forma, Sax. first; whence former, and formost, now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Foremost is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time.

Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:
—A third is like the former. Shakespeare.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past; as, this was the custom in former times.

The present point of time is all thou hast,
The future doubtful, and the former past. Harte.

FORMERLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.

The places were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their summer. Addison.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal salts, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbuthnot.

FORMIDABLE. adj. [formidabilis, Lat. formidabile, Fr.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind. Dryden's Aeneid, Dedication.

They seem'd to fear the formidable fight,
And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. f. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chuse to be shew'd the *formidable*ness of their danger, than by a blind embracing it, to perish. Decay of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remotest shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread;
The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FORMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless; wanting regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love. Shaksp.

FORMULARY. n. f. [formulaire, French; from formule.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.

FORMULARY. adj. Ritual; prescribed; stated.

FORMULE. n. f. [formule, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

TO FORNIFICATE. v. a. [from fornic, Latin.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance. Brown.

FORNICATION. n. f. [fornication, French; fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage, or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door. Shakespeare.

FOR

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Grant.

2. In scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, thou playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by. Ezekiel.

FORNICATOR. n. f. [fornicateur, Fr. from fornix, Latin.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul, as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

FORNICATRESS. n. f. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd;
Let her have needful but not slavish means. Shakespeare.

To FORSAKE. v. a. pret. forsook; part. pass. forsook or forsaken. [versar- ken, Dutch.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God for- sook
God Saul; the room in 's heart wild passions took. Corneley.

Orestes comes in time
To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace;
Prevent his fallhood, and forfake him first:
I know you hate him. A. Philips' Distress Mother.
Daughter of Jove, whose arms in thunder wield
Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield, Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid. Po, e.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state,
Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate. Dryden's Æn.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, advice, and force their places took. Dryden's Ovid.

When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,
Forsook of all fight the left the shore.
Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,
Languish and droop, seem empty and forsoaken,
And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more. Rowe.

FORSAKER. n. f. [from forfake.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forfakers of God. Apocryp.

FORSOOTH. adv. [forsoðe, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; in very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lysander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection! Shakespeare.
A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate. Hayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French. Hollier on Speech.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord. Addison's Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck
a pin wrong in her gown. Debutant.

FOR

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that flumen orationis that Cicero speaks of. Baker on Learning.

2. It is supposed once to have been a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shewed his attention by answering in the words yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakespeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guardian.

To FORSWEAR. v. a. pret. forswore;
part. forsworn. [forþswarian, Saxon.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow
Never to wooe her more; but do forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favours
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shaksp.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chain about his neck,
Which he forsovere most monstrously to have. Shakespeare.

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
Like innocence, and as serenely bold
As truth, how loudly he forsovere thy gold! Dryden's Juvenal.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forswear himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsovere?
To leave fair Sylvia, shall I be forsovere?
To wrong my friends, shall I be much forsovere?
And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shaksp.
One says, is never should endure the sight Of that forsovere, that wrongs both lands and laws. Daniel.
I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Thebeus;
And yet am false, forsovere: the hallow'd shrine,
That heard me swear, is witness to my fallhood. Smith.

To FORSWEAR. v. n. To swear falsely;
to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
—And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,
For false forsovere, and for murder too. Shaksp.

part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the forty-thousandth part. Swift.

FO'RTIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICATION. n. f. [fortification,
French; from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, mounds, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss.
It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Harris.

The Phœnicians, though an unwarlike nation,
yet understood the art of fortification. Broom.

2. A place built for strength.

The hounds were uncoupled, and the flag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgments, might dispense some advantage. Sidney.

3. Addition of strength. Not much used.

To strengthen the infested parts, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote.
Government of the Tongue.

FORTIFIER. n. f. [from fortify.]

1. To strengthen against attacks by walls or works.

Great Dunstan he strongly fortifies. Shakspeare.
He fortified the city against besieging. Eccles.

2. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney.

To fortify the former opinions Tostatus adds, that those which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned
Raleigh.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul:
The heroine asium'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face.
Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

To FORTIFY. v. n. To raise strong places.

Thou art impower'd
To fortify thus far and overlay
With this portentous bridge the dark abyss.
Milton.

FO'RTILAGE. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort; a block-house.

Yet was the fence thereof but weak and thin
Nought fear'd their force that fortilage to win.
Spenser.

In all straight and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle fort,
which should keep and command the straight.
Spenser on Ireland.

FORTIN. n. f. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege. Hauwer.

Thou hast talk'd
Of Palisades, fortins, parapets. Shakspeare.

FO'RTITUDE. n. f. [fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relih of them. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

The better fortitude
Of patience, and heroick martyrdom Unlung. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.

They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs; partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, and partly that virtue, even in this world, might not lose its reward. Nelson.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrungs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell!
Shakspeare's Henry vi.

FO'RTLET. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort.

FO'RTNIGHT. n. f. [contracted from fourteen-nights, peopetynne night, Sax.
It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights:
thus we say, this day seven-nights. So Tacitus, Non diurnum numerum, ut nos, sed notium computant.] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late,
that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnights space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick. Bacon.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.

FOR

He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, 'till about a fortnight before.
Swift.

FO'RTRESS. n. f. [fortresse, French.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-ran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses.
Spenser on Ireland.

The tramp of death sounds in their hearing thrill;

Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave.

God is our fortress, in whose conqu'ring name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.
Shakspeare's Henry vi.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [fortuit, French; fortuitus, Latin.] Accidental; casual;
happening by chance.

A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of atoms. Ray.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring?
Blackmore.

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.]
Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.

tous*.] Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Latin.]
Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to miscarriage. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shakspeare.

He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before. Dryden.

No, there is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:
True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss;
But right before there is no precipice;
Fear makes them look aside, and so their footing mis. Dryden.

FO'RTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.]
Happily; successfully.

Bright Eiza tul'd Britannia's fate,
And boldly wise, and fortunately great. Prior.

FO'RTUNATENESS. n. f. [from fortunate.]

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,

A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shaksp.

A Welchman being at a lessons-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up their hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon.

Hath thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot? Dappo.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other,

to the setting up of a fortuneteller. L'Estrange.

Long ago a fortuneteller

Exactly said what now befell her. Swift.

FO'RTY. adj. [peopetiz, Saxon.]

A second multitude
With wondrous art founded the massy ore,
Severing each kind, scum'd the bullion dross. Milton.

FOUNDATIO. n. f. [fondation, French.]

1. The basis or lower parts of an edifice.

The straightness of houses, the goodliness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye; but that foundation which beareth up the one, that root which ministrereth unto the other nourishment, is in the bosom of the earth concealed. Hooker.

That is the way to make the city flat,
To bring the root to the foundation,
To bury all. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

O Jove, I think,
Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,
Where they should be reliev'd. Shakespeare.

I draw a line along there;
I lay the deep foundations of a wall,
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryd.

2. The act of fixing the basis.

Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation, came a nobler guest. Ticket.

3. The principles or ground on which any notion is raised.

6. Establishment; settlement.

FO'UNDER. n. f. [from found.]

1. A builder; one who raises an edifice;

one who presides at the erection of a city.

Of famous cities we the founders know;
But rivers, old as seas to which they go,
Are nature's bounty: 'tis of more renown
To make a river than to build a town. Waller.

Nor was Prometheus's founder wanting there,
Whom fame reports the son of Multiber. Dryden.

2. One who establishes a revenue for any purpose.

The wanting orphans saw with wat'ry eyes
Their founders charity in the dust laid low. Dryd.

This hath been experimentally proved by the honourable founder of this lecture in his treatise of the air. Bentley.

3. One from whom any thing has its original or beginning.

And the rude notions of pedantick schools
Blaspheme the sacred founder of our rules. Roscommon.

When Jove, who saw from high, with just disdain,
The dead inspir'd with vital breath again,
Struck to the centre with his flaming dart
Th' unhappy founder of the godlike art. Dryden.

TO FO'UNDER. v. a. [fondre, French.]

To cause such a soreness and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set it to the ground.

Phœbus' steeds are founder'd,
Or night kept chain'd below. Shakespeare.

I have founder'd nine score and odd posts;
and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken fir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight: but what of that? he saw me and yielded. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;

So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-fion'd racers of the flood. Dorset.

Brutes find out where their talents lie:
A bear will not attempt to fly;
A founder'd horse will oft debate,
Before he tries a five-bar'd gate. Swift.

If you find a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your master to sell him, because he is vicious, and founder'd into the bargain. Swift.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of founder'd or breaking their backs, and will be sure to find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.

A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.

He who late a sceptre did command,
 Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand.
Dryden.

Cowley, in his unfinished fragment of the Da-vidic, has shown us this way to improvement.
Watts on the Mind.

If a thin or plated body, which being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Opticks.

Some on painted wood
 Transferr'd the fragments, some prepar'd the food.
Pope's Odyssey.

FRAGMENTARY. adj. [from fragment.]

Composed of fragments. Not elegant, nor in use.

She, she is gone; she's gone: when thou know'st this,
 What fragmentary rubbish this world is,
 Thou know'st, and that it is not worth a thought;
 He knows it too too much that thinks it enough.
Donne.

FRAGOR. n. f. [Latin.] A noise; a crack; a crash. Not used.

Pursu'd by hideous fragors, as before
 The flames descend, they in their breaches roar.
Sandys.

FRA'GRANCE. } n. f. [fragrantia, Lat.]

FRA'GRANCY. } Sweetness of smell;
 pleasing scent; grateful odour.

Ever separate he spies,
 Vain'd in a cloud of fragrance, where the flood Half spy'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of cole-worts and cabbages springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats. Addison's Spectator.

Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
 Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy.
Garth.

Such was the wine; to quench whose fervent steam

Scarcely twenty measures from the living stream
 To cool one cup suffic'd: the goblet crown'd,
 Breath'd aromatick fragrances around. Pope.

FRAGRANT. adj. [fragrans, Latin.]

Odorous; sweet of smell.

So fragrant the fertile earth
 After soft show'rs; and sweet the coming on
 Of grateful evening mild. Milton.

The nymph vouchsaf'd to place
 Upon her head the various wreath:
 The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;
 Their scent less fragrant than her breath. Prior.

FRA'GRANTLY. adv. [from fragrant.]

With sweet scent.

As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe. Mart.

FRAIL. n. f.

1. A basket made of rushes.

2. A rush for weaving baskets.

FRAIL. adj. [fragilis, Latin.]

1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.

I know my body's of so frail a kind,
 As force without, fevers within can kill. Davies.
 When with care we have raised an imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand.
Rogers.

2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.

The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may these also speak amiss:
 man is frailly and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fall in words. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

FRAILNESS. n. f. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.

There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so uttering and unstable as the virtue of a coward. Norris.

FRAILTY. n. f. [from frail.]

1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind; infirmity.

Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shakespeare.
 Not should'st thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:

Ere I to thee, thou to thyself was cruel. Milt.
 God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do. Leake.

2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity: in this sense it has a plural.

Love did his reason blind,
 And love's the noblest frailty of the mind. Dry.
 Kind wits with thick light faults excuse;
 Those are the common frailties of the muse.
Dryden.

Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
 And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
 Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
 And wait, till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.

That christians are now not only like other men in their frailties and infirmities, might be in some degree excusable; but the complaint is, they are like heathens in all the main and chief articles of their lives. Law.

FRAISCHUR. n. f. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.

Hither in summer-evenings you repair,
 To taste the fraischur of the pure air. Dryden.

FRAISE. n. f. [French, the caul of an animal.] A pancake with bacon in it.

To FRAME. v. a.

1. To form or fabricate by orderly construction and union of various parts.

The double gates he findeth locked fast;
 The one fair fram'd of burnish'd ivory,
 The other all with silver overcast. Spenser.

2. To fit one to another.

They rather cut down their timber to frame it,
 and to do necessities to their convenient use,
 than to fight. Abbot.

Hew timber, saw it, frame it, and set it together. Newtimer.

3. To make; to compose.

Then chusing out few words most horrible,
 Thereof did verses frame. Spenser.

Fight valiantly to-day;
 And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it:
 For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour.
Shakespeare.

4. To regulate; to adjust.

Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to
 it. Tillotson.

5. To form any rule or method by study or precept.

Thou art their soldier; and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame
Thyself forsooth hereafter theirs. Shakspeare.

I have been a traitor to the law;
I never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the law unto my will.
Shakspeare's Henry vi.

6. To form and digest by thought.

The most absolute ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense or from its own operations about them. Locke.

Full of that flame his tender loaves he warms,
And frames his goddesses by your mother's charms.
Granville.

Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies,
And sure he will; for wisdom never lies. Pope.

How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years. Watts.

7. To contrive; to plan.

Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was. Claren.

8. To settle; to scheme out.

Though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Shakspeare's Coriol.

9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense: as, to frame a story or lie.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceits eccentricities and epicycles. Bacon.

FRAME. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A fabrick; any thing constructed of various parts or members.

If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility, tum themselves any way, as it might happen.
Hooder.

Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence. Bacon.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! thine this universal frame. Milton.

Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame. Dryden.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame,
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god; and all along
Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it strong.
Dryden.

We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it; all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author. Tillotson.

2. Any thing made so as to enclose or admit something else.

Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances. Boyle.

His picture scarcely would deserve a frame.
Dryden's Farnal.

A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be twistly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shine, where it rubs against the palm of one's hand. Newton.

3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.

A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still repairing, ever out of frame;
And never going right. Shakspeare.

Your steady soul preserves her frame;
In good and evil times the same. Swift.

4. Scheme; order.

Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church.
Clarendon.

5. Contrivance; projection.

John the ballard,
Whose spirits toil in frame of villanies. Shakspeare.

6. Mechanical construction.

7. Shape; form; proportion.

A bear's a savage beast,
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Holbrooke.

FRAMER. n. f. [from frame; framman, Saxon.] Maker; former; contriver;
schemer.

The forger of his own fate, the framer of his fortune, should be improper, if actions were predetermined. Houssend.

There was want of accurateness in experiments in the first original framer of those medals.
Arbutnoton Coins.

FRAMPOLD. n. f. [This word is written by Dr. Hacket, frampul. I know not its original.] Peculiar; boisterous; rugged; crossgrained.

Her husband! Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: she leads a very frampold life with him. Shakspeare.

The frampul man could not be pacified.
Hacket's Life of Williams.

FRANCHISE. n. f. [franchise, French.]

1. Exemption from any onerous duty.

2. Privilege; immunity; right granted.

They granted them markets, and other franchises, and erected corporate towns among them.
Davies on Ireland.

His gracious edict the same franchise yields
To all the wild increase of woods and fields.
Dryden.

3. District; extent of jurisdiction.

There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises. Spenser.

To FRANCHISE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To enfranchise; to make free; to keep free.

I lose no honour
In seeking to augment it; but still keep My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear.
Shakspeare's Macbeth.

FRANGIBLE. adj. [frango, Latin.] Fragile; brittle; easily broken.

Though it seems the solidest wood, if wrought before it be well seasoned, it will shew itself very frangible. Boyle.

FRANION. n. f. [Of this word I know not the derivation.] A paramour; a boon companion.

First, by her side did sit the bold Sanfroy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her loosefens took exceeding joy,
Might not be found, a franker franion. Fairy Q.

FRANK. adj. [franc, French.]

1. Liberal; generous; not niggardly.

The moister sorts of trees yield little mofs, for the reason of the frank putting up of the sap into the boughs. Bacon.

They were left destitute, either by narrow provision, or by their frank hearts and their open hands, and their charity towards others. Spence.

'Tis the ordinary practice of the world to be frank of civilities that cost them nothing.
L'Estrange.

2. Open; ingenuous; sincere; not reserved.

3. Without conditions; without payment.

Thou hast it won; for it is of frank gift,
And he will care for all the rest to shift. Hu. Ta.

4. Not restrained; licentious. Not in use.

Might not be found a franker franion. Spence.

FRANK. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A place to feed hogs in; a sty: so called from liberality of food.

Where saps he? Dath the old boar feed in the old frank? Shakspeare's Henry iv.

2. A letter which pays no postage.

You'll have immediately, by several franks,
my epistle to lord Cobham. Pope to Swift.

3. A French coin.

To FRANK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut up in a frank or fly. Hammer.

In the fly of this most bloody boar,
My son George Stanley is frank'd up in hold.
Shakspeare.

2. To feed high; to fat; to cram. Junius and Ainsworth.

3. To exempt letters from postage.

My lord Orrey writes to you to-morrow; and you see I send this under his cover, or at least frank'd by him. Swift.

Gzettes sent gratis down, and frank'd,
For which thy patron's weekly thank'd. Pope.

FRANKALMOIGNE. n. f. The same which we in Latin call libera elemosyna, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers by the name of a tenure in frank aumone, or frankalmoigne, which, according to Briton, is a tenure by divine service. Ayliffe's Parergon.

FRANKINCENSE. n. f. [frank and incense;

so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]

Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acid, and resinous taste. It is very inflammable.

The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it continues to be in many parts. We are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and as to the tree which produces it.

Hill.
Take unto thee sweet spices, with pure frank- incense. Exodus.

I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense gotten in India. Brerewood on Languages.

Black ebony only will in India grow,
And od'rous frankincense on the Sabean bough.
Dryden's Virgil.

Cedar and frankincense, an od'rous pile, Flam'd on the hearth, and wide perfum'd the isle. Pope.

FRANKLIN. n. f. [from frank.] A steward;

a bailiff of land. It signifies originally a little gentleman, and is not improperly Englished a gentleman servant. Not in use.

A spacious court they see,
Both plain and pleasant to be walk'd in,
Where they dux meet a franklin fair and free.
Fairy Queen.

FRANKLY. adv. [from frank.]

1. Liberally; freely; kindly; readily.

Oh, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance,
As frankly as a pin. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.
Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Lucas.

By the toughness of the earth, the sap cannot get up to spread so frankly as it should do. Bacon.

I value my garden more for being full of blackbirds than cherries, and very frankly give them fruit for their songs. Spenser.

2. Without constraint.

The lords mounted their servants upon their own horses; and they, with the volunteers, who frankly lifted themselves, amounted to a body of two hundred and fifty horse. Clarendon.

3. Without reserve.

He entered very frankly into those new designs, which were contriv'd at court. Clarendon.

FRANKNESS. n. f. [from frank.]

1. Plainness of speech; openness; inge-nuousness.

When the conde duke had some celestial merit with the duke, in which he made all the prom-issions of his sincere affection, the other received his protestations with all contempt; and declared

with a very unnecessary frankness, that he would have no friendship with him. Clarendon.

Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship: his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner he intended to do afterwards. Addison's Guardian.

2. Liberality; bounteousness.
3. Freedom from reserve.

He delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, word by word, what Kalandar had told him touching the strange story. Sidney.

The ablest men that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity. Bacon.

FRANKPLEDGE. n. f. [franciplegium, Latin; of franc, i. e. liber & pleige, i. e. fidci jussor.] A pledge or surety for freemen.

The ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the publick peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights, and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decennary, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus franciplegii, view of frankpledge. Cowell.

FRANTICK. adj. [corrupted from phrenetic, phreneticus, Latin; φρενιτικός.]

1. Mad; deprived of understanding by violent madness; outrageously and turbulently mad.

Far off, he wonders what makes them so glad;
Of Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad. Fairy Queen.

2. Transported by violence of passion; outrageous; turbulent.

Esteeming, in the frantick error of their minds, the greatest madness in the world to be wisdom, and the highest wisdom foolishness. Hooker.

To such height their frantick passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy. Dryden.

She tears her hair, and, frantick in her griefs, Calls out Lucia. Addison's Cato.

3. Simply mad.

The lover, frantick,
Saw Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt. Statius.

FRANTICKLY. adv. [from frantick.] Madly; distractedly; outrageously.

Fie, fie, how frantickly I square my talk. Shakespeare.

FRANTICKNESS. n. f. [from frantick.] Madness; fury of passion; distraction.

FRATERNAL. adj. [fraternel, French; fraternus, Latin.] Brotherly; pertaining to brothers; becoming brothers.

One shall arise

Of proud ambitious heart; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The admonitions, fraternal, or paternal, of his fellow christians, or of the governors of the church, then more publick reprehensions; and upon their unsuccessfulness, the censures of the church, until he reform and return. Hammond.

Plead it to her,

With all the strength and heats of eloquence Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Aldif.

FRATERNALLY. adv. [from fraternal.]

In a brotherly manner.

FRATERNITY. n. f. [fraternité, French; fraternitas, Latin.]

1. The state or quality of a brother.
2. Body of men united; corporation; society; association; brotherhood.

'Tis a necessary rule in alliances, societies, and fraternities, and all manner of civil contracts, to have a strict regard to the humour of those we have to do withal. L'Estrange.

With what terms of respect knaves and fools will speak of their own fraternity. South's Sermons.

FRA'TRICIDE. n. f. [fratricide, French; fratricidium, Latin.] The murder of a brother.

FRAUD. n. f. [fraus, Latin; fraude, French.] Deceit; cheat; trick; artifice; subtlety; stratagem.

Our better part remains

To work in close design, by fraud or guile,
What force effected not. Milton.

None need the frauds of sly Ulysses fear.

Dryden's Aeneid.

If success a lover's toil attends,
Who asks if force or fraud obtain'd his ends. Pope.

FRA'UDFUL. adj. [fraud and full.] Treacherous; artful; trickith; deceitful; subtle.

The welfare of us all Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

He, full of fraudulent arts,

This well-invented tale for truth imparts. Dryden.

FRA'UDFULLY. adv. [from fraudful.] Deceitfully; artfully; subtly; treacherously; by stratagem.

FRA'UDULENCE. } n. f. [fraudentia, FRA'UDULENCY. } Lat.] Deceitfulness; trickithness; proneness to artifice.

We admire the providence of God in the continuance of Scripture, notwithstanding the endeavours of infidels to abolish, and the fraudulence of heretics always to deprave the same. Hooker.

FRA'UDULENT. adj. [fraudent, French; fraudentus, Latin.]

1. Full of artifice; trickith; subtle; deceitful.

He with serpent tongue
His fraudulent temptation thus began. Milton.

She mix'd the potion, fraudulent of soul;
The potion mantled in the golden bowl. Pope.

2. Performed by artifice; deceitful; treacherous.

1. Laden; charged.

In the narrow seas that part
The French and English, richly mis-carried
A vessel of our country, richly fraught. Shakespeare.

With joy

And tidings fraught, to tell he now return'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

And now approach'd their fleet from India,
fraught

With all the riches of the rising sun,
And precious land from southern climates brought. Dryden.

2. Filled; stored; thronged.

The scripture is fraught even with laws of nature. Hooker.

By this sad Una, fraught with anguish sore,
Arrived, where they in earth their blood had spilt. Spenser.

I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Whoever bath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and understanding do clarify and break up in the communicating and discouraging with another. Bacon.

Hell, their fit habitation, fraught with fire, Unquenchable, the house of woe and pain. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Abdallah and Belfora were so fraught with all kinds of knowledge, and possessed with a so constant passion for each other, that their solitude never lay heavy on them. Addison.

FRAUGHT. n. f. [from the participle.] A freight; a cargo.

Yield up, oh love, thy crown and parted throne
To tyrannous hate! swell, below, with thy fraught;

For 'tis of aspicks tongues. Shakespeare's Othello.

The bark that all our blessings brought,
Charg'd with thyself and James, a doubly royal fraught. Dryden.

To FRAUGHT. v. n. [for freight, by corruption.] To load; to crowd.

Hence from my sight:

If after this command thou fraught the court
With any unworthiness, thou dy'st. Shakespeare.

FRAUGHTAGE. n. f. [from fraught.] Lading; cargo. A bad word.

Our fraughtage, sir,

I have convey'd aboard. Shakespeare.

FRAY. n. f. [effrayer, to fright, French.]

1. A battle; a fight.

Time tells, that on that ever blessed day,
When christian swords with Persian blood were dy'd,

The furious prince Tancredie from that fray
His coward foes chased through forests wide. Fairfax.

After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought,
Shakespeare's Henry vi.

He left them to the fates in bloody fray,
To toil and struggle through the well-fought day. Pope.

2. A duel; a combat.

Since, if we fall before th' appointed day,
Nature and death continue long their fray. Deudham.

The hoaster Paris oft defin'd the day
With Sparta's king to meet in single fray. Pope.

3. A broil; a quarrel; a riot of violence.

I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice, and turn two musing steps
Into a many stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth. Shakespeare.

To FRAY. v. a. [effrayer, French.]

1. To fright; to terrify.

The panther, knowing that his spotted hide
Doth please all beasts, but that his looks them fray,

Within a bush his dreadful head doth hide,
To let them gaze, while he on them may prey. Spenser.

So diversely themselves in vain they fray,
Whilst some more bold to measure him stand nigh. Spenser.

Fishes are thought to be frayed with the motion caused by noise upon the water. Bacon.

Those vultures prey only on carcases, on such stupid minds as have not life and vigour to fray them away. Government of the Tongue.

2. [frayer, French.] To rub.

A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any condition of subjection. Temple.

Free, what, and better'd with so many chains?
Dryden.

How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will? Locke.

This wretched body trembles at your pow'r: Thus far could fortune; but she can no more: Free, to herself my potent mind remains, Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains. Prior.

Set an unhappy pris'nér free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee. Prior.

2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.

Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a publick constitution for the ordering of the church. Hooker.

Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shakespeare.

It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not indifferent. South.

3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell:
Not free, what proof could they have given sincere

Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd;
Not what they would? Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Permitted; allowed.

Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you? Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.

Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure; and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton.

To gloomy cares my thoughts alone are free,
I'll the gay sports with troubled thoughts agree. Pope.

5. Licentious; unrestrained.

O conspiracy!

Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,
When evils are most free? Shaksp. Julius Caesar.

Physicians are too free, upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends. Temple.

The critics have been very free in their censures. Felton.

I know there are to whose presumptuous thoughts
Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults. Pope.

6. Open; ingenuous; frank.

Castalo, I have doubts within my heart;

Will you be free and candid to your friend?
Orway's Orphan.

7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.

'Tis not to make me jealous;

To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,

Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well,
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous. Shakespeare's Othello.

Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great laughter. Hakewill on Providence.

Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe. Prior.

8. Liberal; not parsimonious: with of.

Glo'ster too, a foe to citizens;

O'erhauling your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakespeare.

No statute in his favour says,

How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as other spare. Pope.

Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works. Pope.

9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.

We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask. Bacon.

10. Clear from distress.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind. Shaksp. King Lear.

11. Guiltless; innocent.

Make mad the guilty, and appall the free,
Confound the ignorant. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

My hands are guilty, but my heart is free. Dryden.

12. Exempt: with of anciently; more properly from.

These
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
And free from conscience, is a slave to fame. Denham.

Let envy, then, those crimes within you see,
From which the happy never must be free. Dryden.

Their steeds around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.

The will free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.

13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without vassalage; admitted to the privileges of any body: with of.

He therefore makes all birds of every sort
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
Their several kinds alike, and equally protect. Dryden.

What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end

Art thou of Bethlehem's noble college free?
Stark-flaring mad, that thou should'st tempt the sea? Dryden.

14. Without expence; by charity, as a free-school.

TO FREE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.

The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
By law and process of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to The anger of the king, nor guilty of,
If any be the trespass of the queen. Shakespeare.

He recovered the temple; free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down. 2 Mac.

Can'st thou no other master understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand? Dryden.

Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.

2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill: with of or from.

It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniences the passions of those meetings gave him than to dissolve them. Clarendon.

Hercules
Freed Erymarus from the foaming boar. Dryden.

Our land is from the rage of rygers freed. Dryden's Virgil.

3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.

The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.

Fierce was the fight; but hast'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover free'd his way. Dryden.

This master-key
Frees every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryden.

4. To banish; to send away; to rid. Not in use.

We may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights;
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives. Shakespeare.

Never any Sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.

5. To exempt.

For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Romans.

FREERO'OTER. n. f. [free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Perkin was not followed by any English of name, his forces consisted mostly of base people and freerooters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom. Bacon.

The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish fugitives, or such freerooters as failed under their commission, taken all the freemen. Clarendon.

FREERO'OTING. n. f. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handsomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freerooting, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser.

FREEBORN. n. f. [free and born.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.

O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freeborn brethren of the world!

I shall speak my thoughts like a freeborn subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst. Dryden.
Dryden's Æneid, Dedication.

Small freeborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from content and custom draw
The same right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.

FRECHAPPEL. n. f. [free and chapel.] Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chapel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowell.

FREECOST. n. f. [free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.

We must not vouch any man for an exact matter in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is a'clock for nothing. South.

FREEDMAN. n. f. [freed and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman jakes, and will be preferred;
First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden.

FREEDOM. n. f. [from free.]

1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

The laws themselves they do specially rage at,
as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenser on Ireland.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' infernal
Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe;
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryd.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.

By our holy Saviour have I sworn
To have the due and extent of my hand;
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakespeare.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people! Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.

I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall. Milton.

In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is to much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South.

5. Unrestraint.

I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. Maccabees.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

The freedom of their state lays them under a greater necessity of always chusing and doing the best things. Law.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.

FREEDOMED. adj. [free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too freedomed. Shaksp., Hamlet.

FREHEARTED. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.

Love must frehearted be, and voluntary;
And not enchanted, or by fate constrain'd. Dromius.

FREHOLD. n. f. [free and bold.] That land or tenement which a man holds in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life.

Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposite to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bookland, that is, holden by book or writing, or foreland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowell.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addis.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give consent. Swift.

FREHOLDER. n. f. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FREELY. adv. [from free.]

1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependance.

2. Without restraint; heartily; with full gust.

If my son were my husband, I would freelier rejoice in that alliance wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Plentifully; lavishly.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

4. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well. Pope.

5. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in thyming than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Alchem.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:
Fortune was never worthipp'd by the wife;
But set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden.

6. Without necessity; without predetermination.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell. Milton.

He leaves us to chuse with the liberty of reasonable beings; they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers.

7. Frankly; liberally; without cost.

By nature all things have an equally common use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bottoms of the universe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneously; of its own accord.

FREEMAN. n. f. [free and man.]

1. One not a slave; not a vassal.
Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakespeare.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worst, be liberty, true liberty, madmen and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent,
What nature did like captives treat before. Dryd.

What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison.

FREEMINDED. adj. [free and mind.] Unperplexed; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon.

FREENESS. n. f. [from free.]

1. The state or quality of being free.

2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuousness; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Spence.

FREESCHOOL. n. f. [free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one freeshool at least erected in every diocese. Davies.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small freeshool; a gentleman who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPOKEN. adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like count as Marcus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, as if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a freespoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

FREESTONE. n. f. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction.

I saw her hand; she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakespeare.

FREE

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison.
FREETHINKER. n. f. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.
 Atheist is an old-fashioned word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison.
 Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against christianity? and therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabric must fall to the ground. Swift.

FREEWILL. n. f. [free and will.] 1. The power of directing our own actions without restraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntaryness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Esai.

FREEWOMAN. n. f. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. 1 Maccabees.

TO FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [frisen, Dutch.]

2. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orpheus with his lute made trees
 And mountain tops, that freeze,
 Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakspeare.
 Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakspeare.
 Heav'n freezes above severe, the clouds congeal,
 And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryden.

TO FREEZE. v. a. pret. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me,
 Ev'n in his garments! Shakspeare. Richard III.
 My maker and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shakspeare.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
 That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shakspeare.
 Death came on a sudden,
 And exercis'd below his iron reign;
 Then upward to the seat of life he goes;
 Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

TO FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted; part. fraught; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The princes
 Have to the port of Athens sent their ships, Fraught with the ministers and instruments
 Of cruel war. Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida. Prolog.
 Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than those,
 Who freights a ship to venture on the seas;
 With one frail interposing plank to save
 From certain death, roll'd on by every wave. Dryden's Juvenal.

FREE

Freighted with iron, from her native land
 I steer my voyage. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To load as the burden; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.

I would Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere
 It should the good ship to have swallow'd, and
 The freighting souls within her. Shakspeare.

FREIGHT. n. f.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight;
 The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden.

2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FREIGHTER. n. f. [fretteur, French.]

He who freights a vessel.

FREN. n. f. A stranger. An old word wholly forgotten here; but retained in Scotland. Beattie.

But now from me his madding mind is frant,
 And woos the widow's daughter of the glen;
 And now fair Rosalind hath bred his smart,
 So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spenser.

FRENCH (chalk). n. f. An indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.

French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as Beattie is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone. Wood.

TO FRENCHIFY. v. a. [from French.]

To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb.

They mistook nothing more in King Edward the Confessor than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. Cambden's Remains.

Has he familiarly drunk'd
 Your yellow starch, or laid your doublet
 Was not exactly Frenchified? Shakspeare.

FRENETICK. adj. [frenetique, French; phrenetic, generally therefore written phrenetick.] Mad; distracted.

He himself impatient,
 By mean of his frenetick malady. Daniel's Civil War.

FRENZY. n. f. [frenis; phrenitis, Latin; whence phrenetick, phrenetick, phrenzy, or frenzy.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.

That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy.

Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
 True fortitude is seen in great exultations,
 That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
 All else is touring frenzy and distraction. Addison.
 Why such a disposition of the body induceth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy: this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bentley.

FREQUENCE. n. f. [frequence, French; frequentia, Latin.] Crowd; concourse; assembly.

The frequence of degree,
 From high to low throughout Shakspeare.
 He, in full frequence bright
 Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Milton.

FREQUENCY. n. f. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done.

Should a miracle be indulg'd to one, others would think themselves equally entitled to it; and if indulg'd to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle: its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Atterbury.

FREE

2. Concourse; full assembly.

Thou cam'st ere while into this senate: who
 Of such a frequency, to many friends
 And kindred thou hast here, saluted thee? Ben Jonson's Catilina.

FREQUENT. adj. [frequent, French; frequens, Latin.]

1. Often done; often seen; often occurring.

The frequent these times are, the better. Duty of Man.

An ancient and imperial city falls;
 The streets are fill'd with frequent funerals. Dryden.
Frequent heries shall besiege your gates. Pope.

2. Used often to practise any thing.

The christians of the first times were generally frequent in the practice of it. Duty of Man.

Every man thinks he may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself hearty for the government. Swift.

3. Full of concourse.

Frequent and full. Milton.

TO FREQUENT. v. a. [frequentato, Latin; frequenter, French.] To visit often; to be much in any place; to resort often to.

They in latter day,
 Finding in it fit ports for filcher's trade,
 'Gan more the lame frequent, and further to invade. Spenser.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto;
 our Saviour himself and the apostles frequented them. Hooker.

This fellow here, this thy creature,
 By night frequents my house. Shakspeare. Timon.

At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels. Bacon.

With tears
 Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, rent from hearts contrite, in sign
 Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent;
 And there what I before digested, vent. Denham.

That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted. Dryden.

FREQUENTABLE. adj. [from frequent.] Conversable; accessible. Not now used, but not inelegant.

While you had staid in him, the exercises of that age and his humour not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous. Sidney.

FREQUENTATIVE. adj. [frequentativus, Fr. frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.

FREQUENTER. n. f. [from frequent.] One who often resorts to any place.

Persons under bad imputations are no great frequenters of churches. Swift.

FREQUENTLY. adv. [frequenter, Latin.] Often; commonly; not rarely; not seldom; a considerable number of times; manifold times.

I could not, without much grief; observe how frequently both gentlemen and ladies are at a loss for questions and answers. Swift.

FRESCO. n. f. [Italian.]

1. Coolness; shade; which is that of the evening or morning.

With spirits
 Love more the fresco of the nights. Prior.

2. A picture not drawn in glaring light, but in dusk.

Here thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye;
 A fading fresco here demands a sigh. Pope.

FRESH. adj. [frerc, Saxon; frische, French.]

1. Cool; not rapid with heat.

I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast;
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring;
And draw thy water from the freight spring.

Prior.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixt with the salt water;
So that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.

3. New; not had before.

No borrow'd bays his temples did adorn,
But to our crown he did fresh jewels bring. Dryd.

4. New; not impaired by time.

This second source of men, while yet but few,
And while the dread of judgment past remain
Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what is just and right, Shall lead their lives. Milton's Par. Lost.

That love which first was set, will first decay;
Mine of a fresh date will longer stay. Dryden.

5. In a state like that of recentness.

We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh like flowers in waters. Denham.

With such a care
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bulb they grew. Waller.

Thou sun, bid I, fair light!
And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay! Milton.

Think not, 'cause men flatter'ing say,
Y'are fresh as April, sweet as May,
Bright as is the morning star,
That you are so. Carew.

6. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spurs Palmarus press'd;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest. Dryd.
Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;
Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they distend their tortur'd joints. Dryden.

7. Repaired from any loss or diminution.

Not lies the long; but as as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryd.

8. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; unfaded; unimpaired.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him; take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore. Bacon's Holy War.

Two swains
Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair. Pope.

9. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.

Tell me
Hast thou beheld a freer gentlewoman,
Such war of white and red within her cheeks? Shakspeare.

It is no rare observation in England to see a fresh coloured lussy young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him soon after attending her to her grave. Harvey on Consumptions.

They represent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, innocent, fresh coloured young gentlemen. Addison's Spectator.

10. Brisk; strong; vigorous.

As a fresh gale of wind fills the sails of a ship. Helder.

11. Fastidious; opposed to eating or drinking.

A low word.

12. Sweet; opposed to stale or stinking.

FRESH. n. f. Water not salt.
He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not shew him
Where the quick freshes are. Shakspeare.

TO FRESHEN. v. a. [from fresh.] To make fresh.

Preclusive drops let all their moisture flow
In large effusion o'er the freshen'd world. Thomson's Spring.

TO FRESHEN. v. n. To grow fresh.

A freshening breeze the magick power supply'd,
While the wing'd vessel flew along the tide.

Pope's Odyssey.

FRESHET. n. f. [from fresh.] A pool of fresh water.

All fish from sea or shore,
Freshet or purling brook, or shell or fin. Milton.

FRESHLY. adv. [from fresh.]

1. Coolly.

2. Newly; in the former state renewed.

The weeds of heresy being grown unto such ripeness as that was, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterwards freshly spring up again, no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker.

Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouth as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.

Shakspeare's Henry v.

They are now freshly in difference with them. Bacon.

3. With a healthy look; ruddily.

Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled? Shakspeare.

FRESHNESS. n. f. [from fresh.]

1. Newness; vigour; spirit; the contrary to vapidity.

Most odorous smell best broken or crushed;
but flowers pressed or beaten, do lose the freshness
and sweetness of their odour. Bacon.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not staleness.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind;
for surely no man was ever weary of thinking, that he had done well or virtuously. South.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.

The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men. Hayward.

4. Coolness.

There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of summer; but they be but penning of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them reverberate in circles. Bacon.

Say, if she please, the hither may repair,
And breathe the freshness of the open air. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

She laid her down to rest,
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air. Addison.

5. Ruddiness; colour of health.

The secret venom, circling in her veins,
Works through her skin, and bursts in bloating stains;
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face. Granville.

6. Freedom from saltiness.

FRESHWATER. [A compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.]

Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatize those who come first to sea as freshwater men or novices.

Those nobility, or freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks. Knox's History of the Turks.

FRET. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from fretan, to eat; others from fretan, to adorn; some from fretto; Skinner more probably from fremo, or the French fretiller: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fretum.]

1. A strait, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fre, or channel of the sea, running between two shores. Brown.

2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

Of this river the surface is covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fre, and is still breaking against the dunes that oppose its passage. Addison on Italy.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fre, dischargeth itself of heterogeneous mixtures. Derham.

3. That stop of the musical instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requirerth good winding of a string before it will make any note; and, in the tops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon's Natural History.

The harp

Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fre by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice Choral or unison. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute. Grew's Cosmology, Sac.

4. Work rising in protuberances.

The frets of houses, and all equal figures,
please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon's Natural History.

We take delight in a prospect well laid out, and diversified with fields and meadows, woods and rivers, in the curious fre works of rocks and grottos. Spectator.

5. Agitation of the mind; commotion of temper; passion.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
Another chafe, may warm at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his fre;
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.
The incredulous Phœac, having yet
Drank but one round, reply'd in sober fre. Tate's Juvenal.

You, too weak, the slightest loss to bear,
Are on the fre of passion, boil and rage. Crœch's Juvenal.

Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fre;
I never answer'd, I was not in debt. Pope.

TO FRET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To agitate violently by external impulse or action.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise
When they are fretted with the gulls of heav'n. Shakspeare.

2. To wear away by rubbing.

Drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth. Shakspeare's Richard II.
In the banks of rivers, with the walking of the water, there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold. Abbot.

Before I ground the object metal on the pitch,
I always ground the putty on it with the concave copper, 'till it had done making a noise; because, if the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fre the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton's Opticks.

3. To hurt by attrition.

Antony
Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear
Of what he has and has not. Shakspeare.

4. To corrode; to eat away.

It is fre inward, whether it be bare within or without. Levinsworth.

The painful husband, plowing up his ground, Shall find all fre with rust, both pikes and shields,
And empty halms under his harrow found. Hatfield.

5. To form into raised work.
Nor did there want
Cornice or freeze, with bossy sculptures grav'd;
The roof was fretted gold. Milton.

6. To variegate; to diversify.
Yon grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.
Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

7. To make angry; to vex.
The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chosen thou hast, and they that over-ween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and truth.
Milton.

Because thou hast fretted me in all these things, behold I will recompence thy way upon thine head. Ezekiel.

Such an expectation, cries one, will never come to pass: therefore I'll even give it up, and ground feet myself. Collier.

Injuries from friends fret and gail more, and the memory of them is not so easily obliterated.
Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

TO FRET. v. n.

1. To be in commotion; to be agitated.
No benefits whatsoever shall ever alter or allay that diabolical rancour, that frets and ferments in some hellish breasts, but that it will foam out in slander and invective. South.

Th' adjoining brook, that purrs along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
Now scarcely moving through a ready pool.
Thomson's Summer.

2. To be worn away; to be corroded.
Take a piece of gloves leather that is very thin,
and put your gold therein, with sal armoniac, binding it close, and than hang it up: the sal armoniac will fret away, and the gold remain behind. Præsum on Drawing.

3. To make way by attrition or corrosion.
These do but indeed scrape off the exuberances, or fret into the wood, and therefore they are very seldom used to soft wood. Mason.
It inflamed and swelled very much; many wheels arose, and fretted one into another with great excoriation. Wifeman.

4. To be angry; to be peevish; to vex himself.
They trouble themselves with fretting at the ignorance of such as withstand them in their opinion. Hooker.

We are in a fretting mind at the church of Rome, and with angry disposition enter into cogitation. Hooker.

Helpless, what may it boot
To fret for anger, or for grief to mourn!
Fairy Queen.

Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters.
Shakespeare's Henry v.

Be lion-mettled, proud, and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

His heart frettest against the Lord. Proverbs.
Hudibras fretting
Conquest should be so long a getting,
Drew up his force. Hudibras.

He swells with wrath, he makes outrageous
muan,
He frets, he fumes, he flares, he stamps the ground. Dryden.

How should I fret to mangle ev'ry line,
In reverence to the fins of thirty-nine. Pope.

FRETFUL. adj. [from fret.] Angry;
peevish; in a state of vexation.

Thy knotty and combined locks to part,
And each particular hair to stand on end,
Like quills upon the fretful porcupine. Shaksp.

Where 's the king?
—Contending with the fretful elements;
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea. Shaksp.

VOL. I.

They are extremely fretful and peevish, never well at rest; but always calling for this or that, or changing their position of lying or sitting.

Harvey on Consumptions.

Are you positive and fretful?
Heedless, ignorant, forgetful? Swift.

FRETFULLY. adv. [from fretful.] Peev-ishly.

FRETFULNESS. n. f. [from fretful.] Passion; peevishness.

FRETTY. adj. [from fret.] Adorned with raised work.

FRIABILITY. n. f. [from friable.] Capacity of being easily reduced to powder.
Hardness, friability, and power to draw iron,
are qualities to be found in a bad stone. Locke.

FRIABLE. adj. [from friable, French; fri-abilis, Latin.] Easily crumbled; easily reduced to powder.

A spongy excrecence groweth upon the roots of the Liferoot, and sometimes on cedar, very white, light, and friable, which we call agarick.

Bacon's Natural History.

The liver, of all the viscera, is the most friable, and easily crumbled or dissolved. Arbuth.

FRIAR. n. f. [A corruption of frere, French.] A religious; a brother of some regular order.

Holy Franciscan friar ' brother' ho! Shaksp.

All the priests and friars in my realm,
Shall in procession sing her eulogies praise. Shaksp.

He 's but a friar, but he 's big enough to be a pope. Dryden.

Many jesuits and friars went about, in the disguise of presbyterian and independent ministters, to preach up rebellion. Swift.

A friar would need show his talent in Latin.

Swift.

FRIARLIKE. adj. [from friar.] Monastic; unskilled in the world.

Their friarlike general would the next day make one holiday in the christian calendars, in remembrance of thirty thousand Hungarian martyrs slain of the Turks. Knotter.

FRIARLY. adj. [from friar and like.] Like a a friar, or man outtaught in life.

Seek not proud riches, but such as thou may'st get justly, use sobriety, distribute cheerfully, and leave contentedly; yet have no abstract nor fri-arly contempt of them. Bacon's Essays.

FRIARSCOWL. n. f. [from friar and cowl.] A plant. It agrees with arum, from which it differs only in having a flower resembling a cowl.

FRIARY. n. f. [from friar.] A monastery or convent of friars.

FRIARY. adj. Like a friar.
Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow when he had sweetly invented to signify his name, St.
Francis, with a friary cow in a corn field.

Camden's Remarks.

TO FRIBBLE. v. n. To trifle.
Though cheats, yet more intelligible
Than those that with the stars do fribble. Hulib.

FRIEBLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A trifler.

A friebler is one who professes rapture for the woman, and dreads her consent. Spektator.

FRICASSE. n. f. [French.] A dish made by cutting chickens or other small things in pieces, and dressing them with strong sauce.

Oh, how would Homer praise their dancing does,
Their thinking cheese, and fricasy of frogs!
He'd raise no fables, sing no flagrant lye,
Of boys with cutlard creak'd at Newberry.

King.

FRICATION. n. f. [from fricatio, Latin.] The act of rubbing one thing against another.

Gentle frication draweth forth the nourishment, by making the parts a little hungry, and heating them: this frication I wish to be done in the morning. Bacon's Natural History.

Resinous or unctuous bodies, and such as will flame, attract vigorously, and most thereof without frication, as good hard wax, which will convert the needle almost as actively as the loadstone.
Brown.

FRICITION. n. f. [from friction, French; frictio, from frico, Latin.]

1. The act of rubbing two bodies together.

Do not all bodies which abound with terrestrial parts, and especially with sulphureous ones, emit light as often as those parts are sufficiently agitated, whether the agitation be made by heat, friction,
percussion, putrefaction, or by any vital motion?
Newton's Opticks.

2. The resistance in machines caused by the motion of one body upon another.

3. Medical rubbing with the fleshbrush or cloths.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see both in man and in the currying of horses; for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits to the parts. Bacon.

FRI'DAY. n. f. [from freitag, Saxon.] The sixth day of the week, so named of Frey, a Saxon deity.

As she were not kin to me, she would be as fast on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. Shakespeare.
For Venus like her day, will change her cheer,
And seldom shall we see a Friday clear. Dryden.

FRIEND. n. f. [from friend, Dutch; from freond, Saxon.] This word, with its derivatives, is pronounced friend, friendly: the i totally neglected.

1. One joined to another in mutual benevolence and intimacy: opposed to foe or enemy.

Friends of my soul, you twain
Rule in this realm, and the god's state sustain.
Shakespeare.

Some man is a friend in his own occasion, and will not abide in the day of thy trouble. Eccles.
God's benison go with you, and with those That would make good of bad, and friends of foes. Shakespeare.

Wonder not to see this soul extend
The bounds, and seek some other self, a friend.
Dryden.

2. One without hostile intentions.

Who comes so fast in silence of the night?
—A friend.

—What friend? your name? Shakespeare.

3. One reconciled to another: this is put by the custom of the language somewhat irregularly in the plural number.

He 's friends with Caesar,
In state of health thou say'st, and thou say'st free. Shakespeare.

My son came then into my mind; and yet my mind
Was then scarce friends with him. Shakespeare.

If she repent, and would make me amends,
Bid her but send me hers, and we are friends.
Carew.

4. An attendant, or companion.
The king ordains th' countenance, and ascends
His regal seat, surrounded by his friends. Dryd.

5. Favourer; one propitious.
Aurora riding upon Pegasus, sheweth her sweetness, and how she is a friend to poetry and all ingenious inventions. Poetum.

6. A familiar compellation.
Friend, how comest thou in hither? Mar.
What supports me, do'st thou ask?
The confidence, friend, I have lost mine eyes or erply'd

In liberty's defence. Milton.

To FRIEND. v. a. [from the noun.] To favour; to befriend; to countenance; to support.

I know that we shall have him well to friend.
Shakespeare.

When vice makes mercy, mercy 's so extended,
That, for the fault 's love, is th' offender friended.
Shakespeare.

FRI'ENDED. adj. Well disposed; inclined to love.

Not friended by his wish to your high person,
His will is most malignant, and it stretches
Beyond you to your friends.
Shakespeare.

FRI'ENDLESS. adj. [from friend.]

1. Wanting friends; wanting support; without countenance; destitute; forlorn.
Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Woe to him that is alone, is verified upon
None so much as upon the friendless person.
South.

To some new clime, or to thy native sky,
Oh friendless and forsaken virtue fly.
To what new clime, what distant sky,
Forsaken, friendless, will ye fly.
Dryden.

2. FRIENDLESS Man. The Saxon word for him whom we call an outlaw, because he was, upon his exclusion from the king's peace and protection, denied all help of friends.

FRI'ENDLINESS. n. f. [from friendly.]

1. A disposition to friendship.
Such a liking and friendliness as hath brought forth the effects.
Sidney.

2. Exertion of benevolence.

Let all the intervals be employed in prayers, charity, friendliness and neighbourhood, and means of spiritual and corporal health.
Taylor.

FRI'ENDLY. adj. [from friend.]

1. Having the temper and disposition of a friend; kind; favourable; benevolent.
They gave them thanks, desiring them to be friendly still unto them.
2 Mac.

Thou to mankind
Be good, and friendly still, and oft return!
Milton.

How art thou
To me so friendly grown above the rest
Of brutal kind?
Milton's Paradise Lost.

Let the Nassau-star in rising majesty appear,
And guide the prosperous mariner
With everlasting beams of friendly light.
Prior.

2. Disposed to union; amicable.

Like friendly colours found our hearts unite,
And each from each contract new strength and light.
Pope.

3. Salutory; homogeneal.

Not that Nepenthe, which the wife of Thene
In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,
Is of such power to stir up joy as this,
To life so friendly, or to cool to thirst.
Milton.

FRI'ENDLY. adv. In the manner of friends; with appearance of kindness; amicably

Here between the armies,
Let 's drink together friendly, and embrace;
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home
Of our restored love and amity.
Shakespeare.

FRI'ENDSHIP. n. f. [vriendschap, Dutch.]

1. The state of mind united by mutual benevolence; amity.

There is little friendship in the world; and least of all between equals, which was wont to be signified: that that is between superior and inferior, whose fortunes may comprehend the one the other.
Brown.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence than any friendship with the favourites.
Clarendon.

2. Highest degree of intimacy.

My sons, let your unfeigned discord cease,
If not in friendship, live at least in peace.
Dryden's Ind. Exp.

3. Favour; personal kindness.

His friendship, still so few confin'd,
Were always of the middling kind.
Raw captains are usually lent only preferred by friendship, and not chosen by sufficiency.
Spenser.

4. Assistance; help.

Gracious, my lord, hard-by here is a novel:
Some friendship will it lend you against the temptress;
Repose you there.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

5. Conformity; affinity; correspondence; aptness to unite.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, in mixing together those colours of which we would make trial.
Dryden's Desires.

FRIEZE. n. f. [drap de frise, French.]
A coarse warm cloth, made perhaps first in Friesland.

If all the world
Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse, Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frize,
The All-giver would be unthank'd.
Milton.

The captive Germans of gigantic size,
Are rank'd in order, and are clad in frize.
Dryden's Persius.

He could no more live without his frize coat than without his skin.
Addison's Guardian.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frize;
As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses.
Swift.

FRIEZE. } n. f. [In architecture.] A FRIEZE. } large flat member which separates the architrave from the cornice; of which there are as many kinds as there are orders of columns.
Harris.

No jutting frize,
Buttrise, nor cologne of 'vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant-bed, and procreant cradle.
Shakespeare.

Not did there want
Cornice or frize with bossy sculptures grav'n;
The roof was fretted gold.
Milton's Par. Lost.
Polydore designed admirably well, as to the practical part, having a particular genius for frizes.
Dryden's Desires.

FRI'EZED. adj. [from frize.] Shagged or napped with frize.

FRI'EZELIKE. adj. [frize and like.] Resembling a frize.

I have seen the figure of Thalie, the cornick muse, sometimes with an entire headpiece and a little frizelike tower, running round the edges of the face, and sometimes with a mask for the face only.
Addison on Italy.

FRI'GAT. n. f. [frigate, French; fregata, Italian.]

1. A small ship. Ships under fifty guns are generally termed frigates.

The treasure they fought for was, in their view, embellized in certain frigates.
Raieigh's Apology.
On high-raised decks the haughty Belgians ride,
Beneath whose shades our humble frigates go.
Dryden.

2. Any small vessel on the water.

Behold the water work and play
About her little frigate, therein making way.
Fairy Queen.

FRIGIFICATION. n. f. [frigus and facio,
Latin.] The act of making cold.

To FRIGHT. v. a. [frightean, Saxon.]
To terrify; to disturb with fear; to shock with fear; to daunt; to dismay.
This was in the old authors more frequently written affright, as it is always found in the Scripture.

The herds
Were strongly clam'rous in the frighted fields.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Such a numerous host

Fled not in silence through the frighted deep,
With rum upon rum, rout on rout,
Confusion was confounded.
Milton.

Cherubic watch, and of a sword that flame
Wave-waving, all approach far off to fright,
As a guard of passage to the tree of life.
Milton.

Nor could or danger can fright a brave spirit,
With innocence guarded,
With virtue rewarded,
I make of my sufferings a merit.
Dryden.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross, and at a distance: things thus offered to the mind, carry the show of nothing but difficulty.
Locke.

Whence glazing off with many a broaden'd orb,
He frights the nations.
Thomson's Autumn.

FRIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.] A sudden terror.

You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
May think I broke all hospitable laws,
To bear you from your palace-yard by might,
And put your noble person in a fright.
Dryden.

To FRIGHTEN. v. a. To terrify; to shock with dread.

The rugged bear's, or spotted lynx's brood,
Frighten the valleys and infest the wood.
Prior.

FRI'GHTFUL. adj. [from fright.]

1. Terrible; dreadful; full of terror.

Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy,
Thy schooldays frightful, desperate, wild, and furious.
Shakespeare.

Without aid you durst not undertake
This frightful passage o'er the Stygian lake.
Dryden.

2. A cant word among women for any thing unpleasant.

FRI'GHTFULLY. adv. [from frightful.]

and looks frightfully to the imagination; 'tis huge and great.
Burnet.

2. Disagreeably; not beautifully. A woman's word.

Then to her glass; and Betty, pray,
Don't I look frightfully to-day?
Swift.

FRI'GHTFULNESS. n. f. [from frightful.]
The power of impressing terror.

FRI'GID. adj. [frigidus, Latin.]

1. Cold; wanting warmth. In this sense it is seldom used but in science.

In the torrid zone the heat would have been intolerable, and in the frigid zone the cold would have destroyed both animals and vegetables.
Cheyne's Phil. Prime.

2. Wanting warmth of affection.

3. Impotent; without warmth of body.

4. Dull; without fire of fancy.

If justice Philip's coffee head
Some frigid rhymes diffuse,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses.
Swift.

FRI'GIDITY. n. f. [frigiditas, Latin.]

1. Coldness; want of warmth.

2. Dulness; want of intellectual fire.

Driving at these as at the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit.
Brown.
Of the two extremes, one would sooner pardon
phrenzy than frigidify.
Page.

3. Want of corporeal warmth.

The boiling blood of youth hinders that fere-mity which is necessary to severe intenseness; and the frigidity of decrepit age is as much its enemy, by reason of its muling moisture.
Caruside.

4. Coldness of affection.

FRI'GIDLY. adv. [from frigid.] Coldly;
dully; without affection.

FRI'GIDNESS. n. f. [from frigid.]
Coldness; dulness; want of affection.

We fairies, that do run
By the triple Heate's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolick. Shakespeare.

Whether, as some fages sing,
The frolick wind that breathes the spring,
Zephyr with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a maying;
There on beds of violets blue,
And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,
Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire. Milton.

Who ripe, and frolick of his full-grown age,
Roving the Celtick and Iberian fields,
At last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milt.

The gay, the frolick, and the loud. Walter.

FRO'LUCK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A wild prank; a slight of whim and levity.

He would be at his frolick once again,
And his pretensions to divinity. Risammon.

Alcibiades, having been formerly noted for the like frolicks and excursions, was immediately accused of this. Swift.

While rain depends, the pensive cat gives o'er
Her frolicks, and pursues her tail no more. Swift.

To FRO'LUCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To play wild pranks; to play tricks of levity and gayety.

Mainly spirit and genius plays not tricks with words, nor frolicks with the caprices of a frothy imagination. Glanville.

cine to be applied to the forehead, generally composed among the ancients of coolers and hypnoticks. Quincy.

We may apply intercipients upon the temples of maffick: frontals may also be applied.

Wifeman.
The tospedo, alive, stupifies at a distance; but after death produceth no such effect; which had they retained, they might have supplied opium, and served as frontals in phrenies. Brown.

FRONTATED. adj. [from frons, Latin.]

In botany, the frontated leaf of a flower grows broader and broader, and at last perhaps terminates in a right line: used in opposition to cuspated, which is, when the leaves of a flower end in a point. Quincy.

FRONTBOX. n. f. [front and box.] The box in the playhouse from which there is a direct view to the stage.

How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains!
That men may say, when we the frontbox grace,
Behold the first in virtue, as in face. Pope.

FRONTED. adj. [from frons.] Formed with a front.

Part fronted brigades form. Milton.

FRONTIER. n. f. [frontiere, Fr.] The marches; the limit; the utmost verge

Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton.

The parching air
Burns frost, and cold performs th' effect of fire.
Milton

FRORE. adj. [bevrozen, frozen, Dutch.]

Frozen; congealed with cold. Obsolete.

O, my heart-blood is well nigh frore I feel,
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser

FROST. n. s. [froyt, Saxon.]

1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms;
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more watery parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. South

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost.
Pope's Winter.

better progression; as a horse that is shod with frostnails. Grew's Cosmes.

FROSTWORK. n. s. [frost and work.]
Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew con-gealed upon shrubs.

By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,
Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze.
Blackmore

FROSTY. adj. [from frost.]

1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Shakespeare

The air, if very very cold, irritates the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire
scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon

A goat half-starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive.
L'Estrange

2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.

What a frosty spirited rogue is this! Shakspeare

3. Hoary; gray-haired; resembling frost.

Where is loyalty?
If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth? Shakspeare

FROTH. n. s. [fros, Dan. and Scottish.]

1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

His hideous tail then hurled he about,
And therewith all enwrapt the nimble thighs
Of his frothy foamy head. Fairy Queen

When wind expieth from under the sea, as it causeth some resounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Natural History

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end.
Milton's Paradise Regained

The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters.
Glanville

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, daisilow'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dryden

They were the froth my raging folly mov'd
When it boild up; I knew not then I lov'd,
Yet then lov'd most. Dryden's Aurengzebe

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness.
Newton

A painter having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bentley

2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.

3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.

Who eateth his veal, pig and lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tupper

TO FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden Excess muddles the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew

FROTHILY. adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam; with spume.

2. In an empty trifling manner.

FROTHY. adj. [from froth.]

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, peats; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift

2. Soft; not solid; wafting.

Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy.
Bacon's Natural History

3. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourses that commonly attend these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson

FROUNCE. n. s. A word used by fal-coners for a distemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill.

TO FROUNCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To rizzle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and other timely dight
Their gay attire. Fairy Queen

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buckin, or an overitaring frounced head.
Ascham's Schoolmaster

Thus, night oft see me in thy pale career,
'Till civil-tutted morn appear;
Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton

FROUZY. adj. [A cant word.]

1. Fetid; musty.

Petticoats in frouzy heaps. Swift

2. Dim; cloudy.

When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;
A frouzy dirty-coloured red Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift

FROWARD. adj. [frowpearb.] Peevish; ungovernable; angry; perverse; the contrary to toward.

The froward pain of mine own heart made me delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chiefest let in the way. Sidney

She's not froward, but modest as the dove;
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shakspeare

Whole ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths. Proverbs

Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon's Essays

'Tis with froward men, and froward fashions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be sooner quieted by fear than by any sense of duty.
L'Estrange

Motions occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles. Temple

FROWARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Pee-vishly; perversely.

I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly in the way of his heart. Isaiah

FROWARDNESS. n. s. [from froward.]
Peevishness; perverseness.

How many frowardnesses of ours does he smoother? how many indignities does he pass by?
how many affronts does he put up at our hands?
Smith

We'll mutually forget

The warmth of youth, and frowardness of age.
Addison's Cato

FROWER. n. s. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry bath.
Tupper

TO FROWN. v. a. [frogner, old French, to wrinkle. Skinner.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that the frowns; I'll say, she looks as clear

As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakspeare

They chuse their magistrate;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd. Shakspeare's Coriolanus

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet on? You are too much of late i'th' frown.

—Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shakspeare Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope

The wood,

Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Wav'd high, and frown'd upon the stream below.
Pope

FROWN. n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour.

Knolly's History of the Turks.

In his half-clos'd eyes

Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command.

Prior.

FRO'WNINGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?

A countenance more in furrow than in anger.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

FRO'WY. adj. Musty; mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it frowny.

But if they with thy gates should yede,

They soon might be corrupted;

Or like not of the frowy fede,

Or with the weeds be glutted.

Spenser.

FROZEN. part. pass. of freeze.

1. Congealed with cold.

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms Shook Asia's crown with European arms?

Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea.

Dryden.

Pierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth
To invade the frozen waggons of the north.

Dryd.

A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire.

Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

2. Chill in affection.

Against whom was the fine frozen knight,
Frozen in despair; but his armour naturally representing ice, and all his furniture lively answering thereto.

Sidney.

Be not ever frozen coy;

One beam of love will soon destroy

And melt that ice to floods of joy.

Carew.

3. Void of heat or appetite.

Even here, where frozen chafity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires.

Pope.

F. R. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.

Who virtue profess

Shine in the dignity of F. R. S.

Pope.

FRUCTIFEROUS. adj. [from fructifer, Latin.]

Bearing fruit.

Ainsworth.

FRUCTIFICATION. n. f. [from fructify.]

The act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many galleons of water may be drawn from a birch tree, hath slender reason to doubt.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To FRUCTIFY. v. a. [from fructifier, Fr.]

To make fruitful; to fertilize.

The legal levies the sovereign raises are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth.

Howell.

Where'er she looks, behold some sudden birth
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth.

Graville.

To FRUCTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.

It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; as serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life.

Hooker.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles.

Brown.

FRUCTUOUS. adj. [from fructuex, French; from fructify.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn
Of interlac'd occur; and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fruitful moisture o'erabound!

Philips.

FRUGAL. adj. [from frugalis, Latin; frugal, French.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious.

nious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

Reasoning, I oft admire,

How nature wise and frugal could commit
Such disproportions, with superfluous hand

So many nobler bodies to create,

Greater to manifold to this one use.

Milton.

And wing'd puerveyors his sharp hunger fed
With frugal scraps of flesh and mallow bread.

Harte.

If through mists he shoots his sudden beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams,

Suspect a drilling day.

Dryden's Virgil.

FRUGALLY. adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

Mean time young Pammond his marriage
press'd,

And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun,
To join his brother's bridal with his own.

Dryd.

FRUGALITY. n. f. [from frugalité, French; frugalitas, Latin.] Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink.

Bacon.

Frugality and bounty too.
Those differing virtues, meet in you.

Waller.

In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit.

Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony.

Arbutnot's John Bull.

FRUGIFEROUS. adj. [from frugifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit.

Ainsworth.

FRUIT. n. f. [from fructus, Latin; frucht, Welsh; fruit, French.]

1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality.

Shaksp.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.

By taking of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find.

Davies.

See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,
Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own.

Blackmore.

3. Production.

The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth.

Ephesians.

4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.

Can't thou their reck'nings keep? the time compute,
When their swollen bellies shall enlarge the fruit?

Sandys.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.

What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories? Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity?

Swift.

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him.

Lacks.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.

She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale when she remembered the fruits of denying.

Sidney.

They shall eat of the fruit of their own way.

Proverbs.

FRUITAGE. n. f. [from fruitage, French.] Fruit collectively; various fruits.

In heav'n the trees

Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines Yield nectar.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Greedily they pluck'd

The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew
Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flam'd.

Milton.

What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work?

Mor.

FRUITBEARER. n. f. [from fruit and bearer.]

That which produces fruit.

Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles.

Mortimer.

FRUITBEARING. adj. [from fruit and bear.]

Having the quality of producing fruit.

By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not.

Mortimer.

FRUITIER. n. f. [from fruitier, Fr.] One who trades in fruit.

I did fight with one Sampson Stuckfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn.

Shakspere.

Walnuts the fruiterer's hand in Autumn stain;
Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment his gain.

Gay.

FRUITERY. n. f. [from fruiterie, French.]

1. Fruit collectively taken.

Oh, notwithstanding all thy care
To help thy plants, on the small fruiterie Exempt from ill, an oriental blast
Disasterous flies.

Philips.

2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.

FRUITFUL. adj. [from fruit and full.]

1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of vegetable product.

If the continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence.

Sidney.

The earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n, so small,
Nor glitt'ring, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth.

Milton.

2. Actually bearing fruit.

Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.

Shakspere.

3. Prolifick; childbearing; not barren.

Hear, Nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father!

Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend
To make this creature fruitful:
Into her womb convey sterility.

Shakspere.

Male he created thee, but thy comfort
Female for race; then blest mankind, and said,
Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the earth;
Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold.

Milton.

I have copied nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful.

Gay.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's publick ports retire,
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays.

Addison.

FRUITFULLY. adv. [from fruitful.]

1. In such a manner as to be prolific.

How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,
And purer fire through universal night
And empty space did fruitfully unite.

Reverend.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered.

Shakspere.

Fruitfully abound.

Dryden.

FRUITFULNESS. n. f. [from fruitful.]

1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.

Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood.

Raleigh's History.

2. The quality of being prolific, or bearing many children.

FRU

The goddess, present at the match she made,
So blest'd the led, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had thapen'd either born,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born.
Dryden's Ovid.

3. Exuberant abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary; I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for.
Ben Jonson's Discourses.

FRUIT-GROVES. n. s. [fruit and groves.]

Shades, or close plantations of fruit-trees.
The faithful slave,
Whom to my nuptial train Icarus gave,
To tend the fruit-groves.
Pope's Odyssey.

FRUITION. n. s. [fruor, Latin.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.

Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as advance him most deferentially in estimation.
Hobbes.

I am driv'n, by breath of her renown,
Either to seek shipwreck, or to arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love. Shaksp.
God riches and renown to men imparts,
Ev'n all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts Cannot to great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.
Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,
Naked and unadorned, could find success;
'Till by fruition, novelty destroyed,
The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd.
Granville.

Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of men consists: if the affliction be on his body, his appetites are weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed.
Reverend's Sermons.

FRUITIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Enjoying; possessing; having the power of enjoyment. A word not legitimate.

To what our longings for fruitive or experimental knowledge, it is referred among the prerogatives of being in heaven, to know how happy we shall be, when there.
Boyle.

FRUITLESSLY. adv. [from fruitless.] Vainly; idly; unprofitably.

After this fruit curiosity fruitlessly enquireth,
and confidence blindly determineth.
Brown.
Walking they talk'd, and fruitlessly divin'd
What friend the priests by those words design'd.
Dryden.

FRUITLESS. adj. [from fruit.]

1. Barren of fruit; not bearing fruit.

The Spaniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear seed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless.
Raleigh's History.

2. Vain; productive of no advantage; idle; unprofitable.

O! let me not, quoth he, return again
Back to the world, whose joys to fruitless are;
But let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or straightway on that tall long voyage fare.
Spenser's Fairy Queen
Serpent! we might have spar'd our coming hither,
Fruitless to me, though fruit be here t' excess.
Milton.

The other is for entirely waving all sciences into antiquity, in relation to this controversy, as being either needless or fruitless.
Waterland.

3. Having no offspring.

Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And but a barren sceptre in my gripe;
No son of mine succeeding.
Shakspere

FRUIT-TIME. n. s. [fruit and time.] The autumn; the time for gathering fruit.

FRUIT-TREE. n. s. [fruit and tree.] A tree of that kind whose principal value arises from the fruit produced by it.

FRU

Lady, by yonder blessed moon I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops.
Shakspere

They possess'd houses full of all goods, wells digg'd, vineyards and oliveyards, and fruit-trees in abundance.
Nehemiah.

All with a border of rich fruit-tree crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound.
Waller.

FRUMENTA'CIOUS. adj. [from frumentum, Latin.] Made of grain. Dict.

FRUMENTY. n. s. [frumentum, corn, Latin.] Food made of wheat boiled in milk.

To FRUMP. v. a. To mock; to browbeat.
Skinner. Ainsworth.

To FRUSH. v. a. [froisser, French.] To break, bruise, or crush. Hammer.

I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shakspere.

FRUSH. n. s. [from the verb.] A sort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe: it divides into two branches, running toward the heel, in the form of a fork. Farrier's Dict.

FRUSTRA'NEOUS. adj. [frustra, Latin.] Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage.

Their attempts being to frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so perspicuous, it is a marvel that any man should be zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it.
Mare.

He timely withdraws his frustraneous bastardies, and sees the folly of endeavouring to stroke a tiger into a lamb, or to count an Ethiopian out of his colour.
South.

TO FRUSTRATE. v. a. [frustror, Latin; frustrer, French.]

1. To defeat; to disappoint; to balk.

It is an axiom of nature, that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrate.
Hooker.

I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out Rotten opinion.
Shakspere's Henry IV.

Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will;
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.
Not more almighty to resist our might,
Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles. Mil.

2. To make null; to nullify.

The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances.
Spenser.

Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam; and by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,
And frustrate the conquest fraudulent. Milton.

The peculiar strength of the motive may of itself perhaps contribute to frustrate the efficacy of it, rendering it liable to be suspected by him to whom it is addressed.
Atterbury.

FRUSTRATE. participial adj. [from the verb.]

1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.

He is down'd
Whom thus we pray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land. Shaksp. Temp.
The rules of the province of Judea being by Julian baul'd in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and oft consuming the workmen, made the enterprize frustrate.
Raleigh's History

All at once employ their thringing darts;
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design. Dry.

2. Null; void.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that, the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate.
Hobbes.

FRY

FRUSTRA'TION. n. s. [frustratio, Latin; from frustrate.] Disappointment; defeat.

In States notoriously irreligious, a secret and irrefragable power commands their deepest projects, splits their councils, and finites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse.
Sauts.

FRUSTRATIVE. adj. [from frustrate.] Fallacious; disappointing. Ainsw.

FRUSTRATORY. adj. [from frustrate.] That makes any procedure void; that vacates any former process.

Bartolus restrains this to a frustratory appeal.
Gloss.

FRUSTUM. n. s. [Latin.] A piece cut off from a regular figure. A term of science.

FRY. n. s. [from frae, foam, Danish. Skinner.]

1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spaw.

They come to us, but as love draws;
He swallow us, and never chaws;
By him, as by chain'd that, whole tanks to die;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry. Donne.
Fortwith the sounds and seas, each creek and bay,

With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and thinning scales
Glide under the green wave in iculls, that oft Bank the mid-sea. Milton's Parad. Lost.

The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fry. L'Estrange.

So close behind some promontory lie
The huge leviathans, t' attend their prey;
And give no chase, but swallow in the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way. Dryden.

2. Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.

Out of the fry of these rakehell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kern continually supplied and maintained. Spem.
Them before the fry of children young,
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens sounding timbrels sung.
Fairy Queen.

Draw me no constellations there,
Nor dog nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;
Nor any of that monstrous fry
Of animals that stock the sky. Oldham.

The young fry must be held at a distance, and kept under the discipline of contempt. Collier.

FRY. n. s. A kind of sieve.

He dresseth the dust from malt, by running it through a fan or fry. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO FRY. v. a. [frigo, Latin; frie, Welch; frijck, Erse.] To dress food by roasting it in a pan on the fire.

TO FRY. v. n.

1. To be roasted in a pan on the fire.

2. To suffer the action of fire.
So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;
Above the bims they force their fiery way,
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.
Dryden's Æneid.

3. To melt with heat.

Spices and gums about them melting fry,
And, phoenix like, in that rich nest they die. Wal.

4. To be agitated like liquor in the pan on the fire.

Oil of sweet almonds, newly drawn with sugar, and a little spier, spread upon bread toasted, is an excellent nourisher; but then, to keep the oil from frying in the stomach, drink mild beer after it. Bacon's Nat. History.

Where no ford he finds, no water fries,
Nor billows with unequal murmurs roar,
But smoothly slide along, and swell the shoar,
That course he steer'd. Dryden's Æneid.

FUG

Fry. n. f. [from the verb.] A dish of things fried.

Fryingpan. n. f. [fry and pan.] The vessel in which meat is roasted on the fire. If I pass by sea, I may chance to fall from the fryingpan into the fire. Hewel's Voc. Far. We understand by out of the fryingpan into the fire, that things go from bad to worse.

L'Estrange.

defcant in lofty fugues. Milton on Education.

His volant touch

Instinct through all proportions, low and high,

Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fuge. Milton.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,

That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;

In songs and airs express their martial fire,

Combat in trills, and in a fuge expire. Addison.

FULCIMENT. n. f. [fulcimen, fulcimentum,

Latin.] That on which a body rests, which acts or is acted upon at each end,

as a balance or a lever,

The power that equiperates with any weight, must have the same proportion unto it, as there is betwixt their several distances from the centre or fulciment. Withins.

To FULFIL. v. a. [full and fill.]

1. To fill till there is no room for more.

Sparre up the sons of Troy. Shakspere.

2. To answer any prophecy or promise by performance.

They knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. Abel.

The fury bath'd them in each other's blood;

Then, having fix'd the fight, exulting dies,

And bears fulfill'd her promise to the skies. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To answer any purpose or design.

Here nature seems fulfill'd in all her ends. Mt.

4. To answer any desire by compliance or gratification.

If on my wounded breast thou drop'st a tear,

Think for whole sake my breast that wound did bear;

And faithfully my last desires fulfil,

As I perform my cruel father's will. Dryden.

5. To answer any law by obedience.

Love worketh no ill to his neighbour, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. Romans.

This I my glory account

My exaltation, and my whole delight,

That thou in me well-pleas'd declar'st thy will.

Fulfil'd, which to fulfill is all my bliss. Milton.

FULFRAUGHT. adj. [full and fraught.]

Fully stor'd,

Thy fall hath left a kind of blot

To mark the fulfraqht man, the best endu'd,

With some suspicion. Shaksp. Henry v.

FULGENCE. n. f. [fulgens, Latin.] Splen-dour; lustre; glitter. Dia.

FULGENT. adj. [fulgens, Latin.] Shiniing; dazzling; exquisitely bright.

As from a cloud his fulgent head,

And shape star-bright, appear'd. Milton.

dour; dazzling brightness like that of lightning.

Glow-worms alive project a lustre in the dark;

which fulgour, notwithstanding, ceaseth after death. Brown.

When I set my eyes on this side of things,

there shines from them such an intellectual ful- gour, that methinks the very glory of the Deity becomes visible through them. More.

FULGURATION. n. f. [fulguratio, Lat.]

The act of lightening.

FULHAM. n. f. A cant word for false dice. Hannar.

Let vultures gripe thy guts, for gourd and Fulham's hold,
And high and low beguile the rich and poor.
Shakspeare.

FULIGINOUS. adj. [fuliginosus, French.
fuliginosus, Latin.] Sooty; smoky.

Burrage hath an excellent spirit to repels the fuliginous vapours of dusky melancholy, and to cure madnels. Bacon.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous link of lies. Howell.

FULIMART. n. f. [This word, of which Skinner observes that he found it only in this passage, seems to mean the same with float.] A kind of stinking ferret.

The fitcher, the fulimart, and the ferret, live upon the face, and within the bowels of the earth. Walton's Angler.

FULL. adj. [fulle, Saxon; vol, Dutch.]

1. Replete; without vacuity; having no space void.

Better is an handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travel and vexation of spirit.
Ecclesiastes.

The trees of the Lord are full of sap. Psalms.

Where all must full or not coherent be. Pope.

2. Abounding in any quality good or bad.

With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.

You should tread a course

Pretty and full of view. Shakspeare. Cymb.

Followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, are full of inconvenience; they taint business through want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

That must be our cure,

To be no more; sad cure; for who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity?

Milton.

Gay religion's full of pomp and gold. Milr.

In that sweet season, as in bed I lay,

I turn'd my weary side, but still in vain,

Though full of youthful health and pain. Dryden.

He is full of wants which he cannot supply, and compassed about with infirmities which he cannot remove. Tillotson.

From yon bright heaven our author fetch'd his
fire,

And paints the passions that your eyes inspire;

Full of that flame, his tender scenes he warms,

And frames his goddess by your matchless charms. Granville.

3. Stored with any thing; well supplied with any thing.

Full of days was he;

Two ages past, he liv'd the third to see. Ticket.

liquor. Arbuthnot.

8. Complete; such as that nothing further is desired or wanted.

That day had seen the full accomplishment
Of all his travels. Daniel's Civil War.

What remains, ye gods,

Put up and enter now into full bliss? Milton.

Being tried at that time only with a promise, he gave full credit to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

The resurrection of Jesus from the dead hath given the world full assurance of another life.

Tillotson.

9. Complete without abatement; at the utmost degree.

At the end of two full years Pharaoh dreamed.

Genesis.

After hard riding plunge the horses into water, and allow them to drink as they please; but gallop them full speed, to warm the water in their bellies. Swift's Directions to the Groom.

10. Containing the whole matter; expressing much.

Where my expressions are not so full as his,
either our language or my art were defective;
but where mine are fuller than his, they are but the impressions which the often reading of him have left upon my thoughts. Denham.

Should a man go about with never so set study to describe such a natural form of the year before the deluge as that which is at present established, he could scarcely do it in a few words so fit and proper, so full and express. Woodward.

11. Strong; not faint; not attenuated.

I did never know to full a voice issue from to empty a heart; but the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Shakspeare.

Barrels placed under the floor of a chamber,
make all noises in the same more full and resounding. Bacon's Natural History.

Dryden taught to join

The varying verse, the full resounding line.

Pope.

12. Mature; perfect.

In the fantasy of the Mamalukes, slaves reigned over families of free men; and much like were the case, if you suppose a nation, where the custom were that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers out of their possessions. Bacon.

So law appears imperfect, and but given

With purpose to resign them in full time

Up to a better covenant. Milton.

These thoughts

Full counsel must mature. Milton.

Therewith be ended, making a full point of a hearty sign. Sidney.

15. Spread to view in all dimensions.

'Till about the end of the third century, I do not remember to have seen the head of a Roman emperor drawn with a full face: they always appear in profile. Addison on Medals.

FULL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Complete measure; freedom from deficiency.

When we return,

We'll see those things affected to the full. Shakspeare.

He liked the pomp and absolute authority of a general well, and preserved the dignity of it to the full. Clarendon.

The picture of Ptolemy Philopater is given by authors to the full. Dryden.

Sicilian tortures and the brazen hull,

Are emblems, rather than express the full

Of what he feels. Dryden's Persius.

If where the rules not far enough extend,

Some lucky licence answer to the full

Th' intent propos'd, that licence is a rule. Pope.

2. The highest state or degree.

The swan's down feather,

That stands upon the swell in full of tide,

Neither way inclines. Shakspeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. The whole; the total.

The king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy power to encounter you, my lord:
This is the news at full. Shakspeare's Henry iv.
But what at full I know, thou know'st no part;

I knowing all my peril, thou no art. Shakspeare.

4. The state of being satiated.

When I had fed them to the full. Jeremiah.

5. [Applied to the moon.] The time in which the moon makes a perfect orb.

FULL. adv.

1. Without abatement or diminution.

He full

Resplendent all his Father manifest

Express'd. Milton.

In the unity of place they are full as scrupulous; which many of their critics limit to that very spot of ground where the play is supposed to begin. Dryden's Dramatick Poesy.

A modest blush she wears, not form'd by art;
Free from deceit his face, and full as free his heart. Dryden.

The most judicious writer is sometimes mistaken after all his care; but the hasty critic, who judges on a view, is full as liable to be deceived. Dryden's Aurengzebe, Preface.

Since you my

Suspect my courage, it I should not lay,

The pawn I prefer shall be full as good. Dryden.

2. With the whole effect.

'Tis the pencil, thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it. Dryden's Despatch.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,

This universal frame began:

From harmony to harmony,

Through all the compass of the notes it ran,

The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

3. Exactly.

Full in the centre of the sacred wood,

An arm smiteth of the stygian flood. Alfison.

Full nineteen failurs did the ship convey,

A shoal of nineteen dolphins round her play. Addison's Ovid.

4. Directly.

He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.

He then confronts the bull,

And on his ample forehead aiming full,

The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull. Dryden.

At length resolv'd, he throws with all his force

Full at the temples of the warrior horse. Dryden.

5. It is placed before adverbs and adjectives, to intend or strengthen their fignification.

Tell me why on your shield, so goodly fear'd,

Hear ye the picture of that lady's head?

Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead. Spenser.

I was set at work

Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking

Either for such men or such business. Shakspeare.

Full well ye reject the commandment. Mark.

Adam was all in tears, and to his guide

Lamenting turn'd full sad. Milton's Paradise Lost.

You full little think that you must be the beginner of the discourse yourself. Mort.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight.

Dryden.

Full well the god his sister's envy knew,

And what her aims and what her arts pursue. Dryden.

There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself. Swift.

FULL is much used in composition to intimate any thing arrived at its highest state, or utmost degree.

FULL-BLOWN. adj. [full and blowm.]

All as a partridge plump, full-fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well-bodied air. Pope.

FULL-LADEN. adj. [full and laden.]

Laden till there can be no more added.
It were unfit that so excellent a reward as the gospel promises should stoop down, like fruit upon a full-laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand. Tillotson.

FULL-SPREAD. adj. [full and spread.]

Spread to the utmost extent.
How easy 'tis, when destiny proves kind,
With full-spread sails to run before the wind;
But those that 'gainst stiff gales lavinger go,
Must be at once resolv'd and skilful too. Dryden.

FULL-SUMMED. adj. [full and summed.]

Complete in all its parts.
The cedar stretched forth his branches, and the king of birds nestled within his leaves, thick feathered, and with full-summed wings softening his talons east and west; but now the eagle is become half naked. Howell's Vocal Forest.

An herb.

Her fallow leas
The damel, hemlock, and rank fumatory, Doth root upon. Shakspere's Henry v.

To FUMBLE. v. n. [fommelen, Dutch.]

1. To attempt any thing awkwardly or ungainly.

Our mechanick theists will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in their motions, nor to have produced any inept system. Cudworth.

FUM

2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.
Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
3. To play childishly.
I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end.
Shakespeare's Henry v.
- To FUMBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.
As many farewells as he stars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and configur'd kisses to
them,
He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shaksp.
His greasy bald-pate choir
Came fumbling o'er the beads, in such an agony
They told 'em false for fear. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.
- FUMBLER. n. f. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.
- FUMBLINGLY. adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.
- FUME. n. f. [fumée, French; fumus,
Latin.]
1. Smoke.
Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume;
But freight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
And o'er the breach in unobscured vapours fly.
Dryden.
2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.
Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs:
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes.
Shakespeare.
It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, or other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.
In winter, when the heat without is less,
Breath becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crafter vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward.
3. Exhalation from the stomach.
The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South.
Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden.
Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain
surprize,
And its mad fumes in your discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I'll talk the sober joys of love.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.
4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.
The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty.
South.
5. Any thing unsubstantial.
When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.
Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influence upon these things below, than they have, but in gross.
Bacon.
To lay aside all that may seem to have a show of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon.
- To FUME. v. n. [fumer, French; fumo,
Latin.]
1. To smoke.
Their pray'r's pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd
By the great intercessor; came in light
Before their father's throne. Milton.

FUM

- From thence the fuming trail begun to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head.
Dryden's Æn.
Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as the sip'd, the fuming liquor fann'd.
Pope.
2. To vapour; to yield exhalations, as by heat.
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakespeare.
Silenus lay,
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein.
Rescommon.
 3. To pass away in vapours.
We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning:
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at a cack. Ben Jonson.
Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them.
Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
The first fresh dawn than wak'd the gladden'd face,
Of uncorrupted man, nor blust'rd to see
The sluggish sleep beneath its sacred beam;
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away.
Thomson's Spring.
 4. To be in a rage; to be hot with anger.
When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:
He frets, he fumes, he flares, he stamps the
ground,
The hollow row's with clamors ring around. Dryd.
 - To FUME. v. a.
 1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.
Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume, by hanging upon them long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carew.
 2. To perfume with odours in the fire.
She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame,
And oft before the sacred altars came,
To pray for him who was an empty name. Dryden.
The fuming of the holes with brimstone, garlick, or other unsavoury things, will drive moles out of the ground. Mortimer.
 3. To disperse in vapours.
The heat will fume away most of the scent.
Mortimer.
 - FUMET. n. f. The dung of the deer.
 - FUMETTE. n. f. [French.] A word introduced by cooks, and the pupils of cooks, for the stink of meat.
A haunch of ven'ion made her sweat,
Unless it had the right fumette. Swift.
 - FUMID. adj. [fumidus, Latin.] Smoky;
vaporous.
A crafts and fumid exhalation is caused from the combat of the sulphur and iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aquafortis. Brown.
 - FUMIDITY. n. f. [from fumid.] Smoki-ness; tendency to smoke. Diq.
 - To FUMIGATE. v. n. [from fumus, Latin; fumiger, French.]
 1. To smoke; to perfume by smoke or vapour.
Would thou preserve thy famish'd family,
With fragrant thyme the city fumigate,
And break the waxen walls to save the state.
Dryden's Virgil.
 2. To medicate or heal by vapours.
 - FUMIGATION. n. f. [fumigatio, Latin;
fumigation, Fr. from fumigate.]
 1. Scents raised by fire.
Fumigations, often repeated, are very beneficial. Arbutnot
My fumigation is to Venus, just
The souls of roses, and red coral's dust:

FUN

- And, last, to make my fumigation good,
'Tis mixt with sparrows brains and pigeons blood.
Dryden.
2. The application of medicines to the body in fumes.
 - FUMINGLY. adv. [from fume.] Angrily; in a rage.
That which we move for our better learning and instruction sake, turneth unto anger and choler in them: they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly, that they are ashamed to debate their pens with making answer to such idle questions. Hester.
 - FUMITER. n. f. A plant. See FUMA-TORY.
Why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vent sea; singing aloud,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow weeds.
Shakespeare.
 - FUMOUS. } adj. [fumeux-se, French; from FU'MY. } fume.] Producing fumes.
From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
And puff'd the fumy god from out his breast:
Ev'n then he dreamt of drink and lucky ply;
More lucky had it list'd 'till the day. Dryden.
 - FUN. n. f. [A low cant word.] Spurt;
high merriment; frolicsome delight.
Don't mind me, though, for all my fun and jokes,
You bards may find us bloods good-natur'd folks. Moss.
 - FUNCTION. n. f. [functio, Latin.]
 1. Discharge; performance.
There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the function of his public calling, and the same person in common life. Swift.
 2. Employment; office.
The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe: now none is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling. Whitgift.
You have paid the heav'n's your function, and the prisoner the very other debt of your calling.
Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
Nor was it any policy, or obduracy, or partiality of affection either to the men or their function, which fixed me. King Charles.
This double function of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has addressed to her. Addison.
Let not these indignities discourage us from asserting the just privileges and pre-eminence of our holy function and character. Atterbury.
 3. Single act of any office.
Without difference those functions cannot, in orderly sort, be executed. Hooker.
They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments.
Seeling best.
 4. Trade; occupation.
Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits. Shakespeare.
 5. Office of any particular part of the body.
The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley's Sermons.
 6. Power; faculty; either animal or intellectual.
Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit. Shakespeare's Hamlet Nature seems
In all her functions weary of herself:
My race of glory run, and race of shame;
And I shall shortly be with them that rest. Milton.
Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination pines her dangerous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part. Pope.
Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are their diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbutnot.

FUND. n. f. [fond, French; fundo, a bag, Latin.]

1. Stock; capital; that by which any expense is supported.

He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,
And part employ'd to roll the wat'ry tide. Dryd.
In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

2. Stock or bank of money.

As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres. Addison.

FUNDAMENT. n. f. [fundamentum, Latin.] The back part of the body.

FUNDAMENTAL. adj. [fundamentalis, Latin, from fundament.] Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built; essential; important; not merely accidental.

Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth. Raleigh.

You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the charge of 't. Shaksp.

Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the succession should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead. Swift's Examiner.

Gain some general and fundamental truths, both in philosophy, in religion, and in human life. Watts.

Such we find they are, as can controul
The servile actions of our wav'ring soul,
Can fight, can alter, or can chain the will;
Their ill all built on life, that fundamental ill. Prior.

Yet some there were among the founder few,
Of those who less presum'd, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws. Pope.

FUNDAMENTAL. n. f. Leading proposition; important and essential part which is the groundwork of the rest.

We propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnable in respect of superfluities and consequences that arise from them. Saur.

It is a very just reproach, that there should be so much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points. Swift.

FUNDAMENTALLY. adv. (from fundamental.) Essentially; originally.

As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perceptively in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Grew.

Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution. Bentley.

The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposit in such hands as would preserve the people. Swift.

FUNERAL. n. f. [funus, Latin; funerailles, French.]

1. The solemnization of a burial; the payment of the last honours to the dead; obsequies.

Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral. Shaksp.

All things that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral. Shaksp.

He that had cast out many unburied, had none to mourn for him, nor any solemn funeral, nor sepulchre with his fathers. 2 Mac.

No widow at his funeral shall weep. Sandys.

2. The pomp or procession with which the dead are carried.

The long funerals blacken all the way. Pope.
You are sometimes desirous to see a funeral pass by in the street. Swift.

May he find his funeral
I th' sands, when he before his day shall fall. Denham.

FUNERAL. adj. Used at the ceremony of interring the dead.

Our instruments to melancholy bells,
Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast. Shaksp.
Let such honours

And funeral rites, as to his birth and virtues
Are due, be first perform'd. Denham's Sophy.

Thy hand o'er towns the funeral torch displays,
And forms a thousand ill ten thousand ways. Dryden.

FUNERAL. adj. [funerea, Latin.] Suiting a funeral; dark; dismal.

But if his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,
Inhabitant of deep disastrous night,
Homeward with pious speed repairs the main,
To the pale shade funereal rites ordain. Pope.

FUNGOSITY. n. f. (from fungus.) Unsolid excrecence.

FUNGIOUS. adj. (from fungus.) Excrecent; spongy; wanting firmness.

It is often employed to keep down the fungous lips that spread upon the bone; but it is much more painful than the escharotick medicines. Sharp.

FUNGUS. n. f. [Latin.] Strictly a mushroom: a word used to express such excrecences of flesh as grow out upon the lips of wounds, or any other excrecence from trees or plants not naturally belonging to them; as the agarick from the larch-tree and auricula Judæ from elder. Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as the fibres lengthen too much, are too fluid, and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbutnot on Diet.

This eminence is composed of little points, or granules, called fungus, or proud flesh. Sharp.

FUNICLE. n. f. [funiculus, Latin.] A small cord; a small ligature; a fibre.

FUNNEL. n. f. [infundibulum, Latin; whence fundible, funale, funnel.]

1. An inverted hollow cone with a pipe descending from it, through which liquors are poured into vessels with narrow mouths; a tundiuh.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it; but with a funnel, and by degrees, you shall fill many of them. Ben Jonson.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingested meats with ease descend. Blackmore.

The outward ear or auricula is made hollow, and contracted by degrees, to draw the sound inward, to take in as much as may be of it, as we use a funnel to pour liquor into any vessel. Ray.

2. A pipe or passage of communication.

Towards the middle are two large funnels, bored through the roof of the grotto, to let in light or fresh air. Addison.

FUR. n. f. [fourrure, French.]

1. Skin with soft hair with which garments are lined for warmth, or covered for ornament.

December must be expressed with a horrid and fearful countenance; as also at his back a bundle of holly, holding in fur mittens the sign of capricorn. Peachment on Drawing.

'Tis but dressing up a bird of prey in his cap and furs to make a judge of him. L'Estrange.

And lurdly gout wrapt up in fur,
And wheezing asthma, loth to stir. Swift.

2. Soft hair of beasts found in cold countries, where nature provides coats suitable to the weather; hair in general.

This night, wherein the cudrawn bear would couch,

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry, unbattered by runs,
And bids what will take all. Shaksp. King Lear.

Such animals as feed upon flesh qualify it, the one by swallowing the hair or fur of the beasts they prey upon, the other by devouring some part of the feathers of the birds they gorge themselves with. Ray on the Creation.

3. Any moisture exhaled to such a degree as that the remainder sticks on the part.

Mc thinks I am not right in ev'ry part;
I feel a kind of trembling at my heart:
My pulse unequal, and my breath is strong;
Beside a filthy fur upon my tongue. Dryden.

TO FUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To line or cover with skins that have soft hair.

How mad a sight it was to see Dametas, like rich tissue furred with lambskins? Sidney.

Through tatter'd cloaths small vices do appear;

The billows ſall, while Neptune lays his race
On the rough ſea, and ſmooths its furrow'd face.

Dryden.

3. To make by cutting.

There go the ſhips that furrow out their way;
Yea, the re of whales enormous fights we ſee.

Warton.

FURRY. adj. [from fur.]

1. Covered with fur; dreſſed in fur.

From Volgar's banks th' imperious Czar Leads forth his furry troops to war. Fielden.

FUR

2. Confining of fur.

Stretch out thy lazy limbs, awake, awake,
And winter from thy furry mantle shake. Dryd.
Not arm'd with horns of arbitrary might,
Or claws to seize their fury sport in fight. Dryd.

FURTHER. adj. [from forth, not from far, as is commonly imagined; forth, farther, furthest, corrupted from forther, fortheft, ponder, Saxon. Forther is used by Sir Thomas More. See FOETH and FARTHER, of which the examples are to be referred to in this word.]

1. At a greater distance.
2. Beyond this.

What further need have we of witnesses.

Matthew.

Satan had journey'd on, pensive and slow:
But further way found none, to thick intwin'd,
As one continu'd brake, the undergrowth
Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast that pass'd that way.

Milton.

Their earnest eyes they fix'd, imagining
For one forbidden tree a multitude
Now is'n, to work them further woe or shame.

Milton.

I may meet
Some wand'ring spirit, from him to draw
What further would be learn'd.

Milton.

3. Further has in some sort the force of a substitutive in the phrase no further, for nothing further.

Let this appease

Thy doubt, since human reach no further knows.

Milton.

FURTHER. adv. [from forth.] To a greater distance.

And the angel of the Lord went further, and stood in a narrow place.

Numbers.

To FURTHER. v. a. [from the adverb; ponderian, Saxon.] To put onward; to forward; to promote; to countenance; to assist; to help.

Things thus set in order, in quiet and rest,
Shall further thy harvest, and pleasure thee best.

Tupper.

Could their fond superstition have furthered to great attempts without the mixture of a true persuasion concerning the irresistible force of divine power.

Hucker.

Grant not, O Lord, the desires of the wicked;
further not his wicked device.

Psalm.

This binds thee then to further my design,
As I am bound by vow to further thine.

Dryden.

FURTHERANCE. n. f. [from further.] Promotion; advancement; help.

The Gauls learned them first, and used them only for the furtherance of their trade and private business.

Spenser.

Our diligence must search out all helps and furtherances of direction, which scriptures, councils, fathers, histories, the laws and practices of all churches afford.

Hucker.

For gain and work, and success in his affairs,
he seeketh furtherance of him that hath no manner of power.

Hucker.

Cannot my body, nor blood sacrifice,
Intreat you to your wanted furtherance?

Shaksp.

If men were minded to live righteously, to believe a God would be no hindrance or prejudice to any such design, but very much for the advancement and furtherance of it.

Tilghson.

FURTHERER. n. f. [from further.] Promoter; advancer.

That earnest saviour and furtherer of God's true religion, that faithful servitor to his prince and country.

Aphum.

Shakspere.

FURTIVE. adj. [from furtive, French; furtivus, Latin.] Stolen; gotten by theft.

Or do they, as your schemes, I think, have shown,

Dart furtive beams and glory not their own,
All servants to that source of light, the sun?

Prior.

FURUNCLE. n. f. [from furuncle, French; furunculus, Latin.] A bile; an angry pustule.

A furuncle is in its beginning round, hard, and inflamed; and as it increaseth, it riseth up with an acute head, and sometimes a pustule; and then it is more inflamed and painful, when it arrives at its state, which is about the eighth or or ninth day.

Wifeman.

FURY. n. f. [from furor, Latin; sureur, Fr.]

1. Madness.

2. Rage; passion of anger; tumult of mind approaching to madness.

I do oppose my patience to his fury; and am arm'd

To suffer with a quietness of spirit
The very tyranny and rage of his.

Shakspere.

He hath given me to know the natures of living creatures, and the furies of wild beasts.

Wifeman.

3. Enthusiasm; exaltation of fancy.

Taking up the lute, her wit began to be with a divine fury inspired; and her voice would, in so beloved an occasion, second her wit.

Sidney.

A sybil, that had number'd in the world
The sun to count two hundred compasses,

In her prophetic fury few'd the work.

Shaksp.

Greater than human kind the seem'd to look,
And with an accent more than mortal spoke;

Her blazing eyes with sparkling fury roll,
When all the god came rushing on her soul.

Dryden's Enrid.

4. [from furia, Latin.] One of the deities of vengeance; and thence a stormy, turbulent, violent, raging woman.

The fight of any of the house of York,
Is as a fury to torment my soul.

Shakspere.

It was the most proper place for a fury to make her exit; and I believe every reader's imagination is pleas'd, when he sees the angry goddess thus sinking in a tempest, and plunging herself into hell, amidst such a scene of horror and confusion.

Addison on Italy.

FURZ. n. f. [from furz, Saxon; genista spinosa, Latin.] Gorse; gosa.

The whole plant is very thorny: the flowers, which are of the pea-bloom kind, are disposed in short thick spikes, which are succeeded by short compressed pods, in each of which are contained three or four kidney-shaped seeds.

Miller.

Carry out gravel to fill up a hole,
Both timber and furze, the turf and the cole.

Tupper.

For fewel, there groweth great store of furze,
of which the shrubby sort is called tame, and the better grown French.

Carew.

We may know,
And when to reap the grain, and when to sow,
Or when to fell the furze.

Dryden's Virgil.

FURZY. adj. [from furze.] Overgrown with furze; full of gorse.

Wide through the furzy field their route they take,

Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake.

Gay.

FUSÉE. n. f. [from fuseau, French.]

1. The cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.

The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the neat wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fusee, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist.

Hale.

2. A firelock [from fusil, French]; a small neat musket. This is more properly written fusil.

3. FUSES of a bomb or granado shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderson makes twenty seven seconds.

Harris.

4. Track of a buck.

Ainsworth.

FUSIBLE. adj. [from fuse.] Capable of being melted; capable of being made liquid by heat.

Colours afforded by metalline bodies, either collocate with, or otherwise penetrate into other bodies, especially fusible ones.

Boyle.

FUSIBILITY. n. f. [from fusible.] Capacity of being melted; quality of growing liquid by heat.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metalline nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into a nobler use.

Watson.

The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness.

Lowe.

FUSIL. adj. [from fusile, French; fusilis, Latin.]

1. Capable of being melted; liquifiable by heat.

Some, less skillful, fancy these scapi that occur in most of the larger Gothic buildings of England are artificial; and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil marble.

Woodward.

2. Running by the force of heat.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought

Fusile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Perpetual flames,
O'er sand and ashes, and the stubborn flint,

Prevailing, turn into a fusil sea.

Philips.

FUSIL. n. f. [from fusil, French.]

1. A firelock; a small neat musket.

2. [In heraldry; from fusus, Latin.] Something like a spindle.

Fusils must be made long, and small in the middle; in the ancient coat of Montague, argent three fusils in fesse gules. Peuchon on Blazoning.

FUSILIER. n. f. [from fusil.] A soldier armed with a fusil; a musketeer.

FUSION. n. f. [from fusio, Latin; fusum, French.]

1. The act of melting.

2. The state of being melted, or of running with heat.

Metals in fusio do not flame for want of a copious fume, except splinters, which flames copiously, and thereby flames.

Newton's Opt.

FUS

FUSS. n. f. [A low cant word.] A tumult; a bustle.

End as it befits your station;
Come to use and application;
Nor with senates keep a fusi;
I submit, and answer thus.

Swift.

FUST. n. f. [fuste, French.]

1. The trunk or body of a column.

2. [from fusle, French.] A strong smell, as that of a mouldy barrel.

TO FUST. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow mouldy; to smell ill.

FUSTIAN. n. f. [futine, French; from fuste, a tree, because cotton grows on trees.]

1. A kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only.

Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, the serving-men in their new fustian and their white stockings?

Shakespeare.

2. A high swelling kind of writing made up of heterogeneous parts, or of words and ideas ill associated; bombast.

Nor will you raise in me combustion,
By dint of high heroic fustian.

Hudibras.

What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's odes! In general I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they condemn.

Dryden.

Fustian is thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other.

Dryden.

Chance thoughts, when govern'd by the close,
Oft rise to fustian, or descend to prose.

Smith.

FUSTIAN. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Made of fustian.

2. Swelling; unnaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid: used of style.

When men argue, th' greatest part
O' th' contest falls on terms of art,
Until the fustian stuff he spent,
And then they fall to th' argument.

Hudibras.

Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylva, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse.

Dryden's Duress.

FUSTIC. n. f. A sort of wood brought from the West Indies, used in dying of cloth.

DiG.

TO FUSTIGATE. v. a. [fustigo, Latin.] To beat with a stick; to cane.

DiG.

FUSTILARIAN. n. f. [from fusty.] A low fellow; a slinkard; a scoundrel. A word used by Shakespeare only.

Away, you scullion, you rampallian, you fustilarian: I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Henry IV.

FUT

FUTSINESS. n. f. [from fusty.] Mouldiness; stink.

FUSTY. adj. [from fust.] Ill-smelling; mouldy.

He that shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.

Shakespeare.

The fusty plebeians hate thine honours.

Shakespeare.

The large Achilles, at this fusty stuff,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause.

Shakespeare.

FUTILE. adj. [futile, French; futiles, Latin.]

1. Talkative; loquacious.

One futile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal.

Bacon.

2. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.

FUTILITY. n. f. [futilité, French; from futile.]

1. Talkativeness; loquacity.

This fable does not strike so much at the futility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a paying humour.

L'Estrange.

2. Triflingness; want of weight; want of solidity.

Trifling futility appears in their signs of the zodiac, and their mutual relations and aspects.

Bentley.

FUTROCKS. n. f. [corrupted from foot books. Skinner.] The lower timbers that hold the ship together.

FUTURE. adj. [futurus, Latin; futur, French.] That will be hereafter; to come: as, the future state.

Glory they sung to the Most High! good will
To future men, and in their dwellings peace.

Milton.

He sows the teeth at Pallas's command,
And flings the future people from his hand.

Addison's Ovid.

FUTURE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

Time to come; somewhat to happen hereafter.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time; and I feel now
The future in the instant.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after.

Locke.

FUTURELY. adv. [from future.] In time to come.

This presence of God, as it is presence, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding;

FY

neither doth God's aforeknowledge impose any necessity, or bind.

Raleigh.

FUTURITION. n. f. [from future.] The state of being to be; the condition of being come to pass hereafter.

Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no?

Swann.

FUTURITY. n. f. [from future.]

1. Time to come.

Nor my service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me.

Shakespeare's Orkello.

I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron.

Swift.

2. Event to come.

All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place.

South.

This, great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,
Thou skill'd in fate and dark futurity.

Pope.

3. The state of being to be; futurition.

It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence in possibility; it requiring such a free, fixed, and silent mind, as it may be, is no where found but among the platonical ideas.

Glauville's Scripta.

TO FUZZ. v. n. [without etymology.] To fly out in small particles.

FUZZBALL. n. f. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.

FY. interj. [fy, French and Flemish; oio; oab, Lat.] A word of blame and disapprobation.

And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wreaks themselves do now ally.

Spenser.

Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?

Shakespeare.

A bawd, sir, fy upon him.

Shakespeare.

But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stray!

Expectance calls thee now another way.

Milton.

Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?

Ushand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:
Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite.

My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite.

Dryden.

Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaudies.

Tatler.

G

G

G Has two sounds, one from the Greek γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard g, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound g retains before a, o, u, l, r; as gate, go, gull. The other sound, called that of the soft g, resembles that of j, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of the words before b; as, might. The Saxon g, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.

GABARDINE. n. f. [gavardina, Italian.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.

My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabouts.

Shakespeare.

You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gabardine. Shakespeare.
The knight did strait submit,
And laid his weapons at her feet:
Neat he distrust'd his gabardine,
And with it did himself resign. Hudibras.

To GA'BLE. v. n. [gabbari, Italian;
gabberen, Dutch.]

1. To make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage,
Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like

A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known. Shakespeare.
Flocks of fowl, that when the tempest roars,
With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent shoar.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house?

Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labourers of Babel. Hudib.
Such a rout, and such a rabble,
Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift.

GA'BLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.

Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: though's language, gabble enough, and good enough. Shakespeare.

2. Loud talk without meanings.

Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls,
Not understood. Milton's Parad. Lost.

GA'BBLER. n. f. [from gabble.] A prater;
a chattering fellow.

GA'BEL. n. f. [gabello, French; gabellu, Italian; gafel, Saxon, a tribute.] An excise; a tax.

The gabels of Naples are very high on oil,
wine, and tobacco. Adelison on Italy.

GABION. n. f. [French.] A wicker basket which is filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.

His battery was defended all along with gabions, and caïsses filled with sand. Knutles.

GA'BLE. n. f. [gaval, Welsh; gable,
French.] The sloping roof of a building.

Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work.
Martinez's Husbandry.

GAD. n. f. [gab, Saxon; gaddur, Islandick,
a club.]

1. A wedge or ingot of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Maxon's Mech. Exerc.

2. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for a style or graver. [from gab, Saxon, a goad.]

I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words.
Shakespeare.

To GAD. v. n. [Derived by Skinner from gadfly; by Junius from gadow, Welsh, to forsake; thought by others only the preterit of the old word gaan, to go.]
To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.

How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?

—Where I have learnt me to repent. Shaksp.
Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Eclui.

The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,
And thronged forth about the world to gad;
Each land they fill'd, river, stream and shore.

Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home. Bacon.

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion;
To court each place or fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.

Thou, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,

With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echo's moan. Milton.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their flings draw blow,

And drive the cattle gadding through the wood.
Dryden.

She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;
With furies fights her from her native home,
And drives her gadding, round the world to roam. Dryden.

There's an ox lost, and this cockcomb runs a gadding after wild fowl. L'Estrange.

No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding.

GA'DDER. n. f. [from gad.] A rambler;
one that runs much abroad without business.

A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, cautieth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame. Eclui.

GA'DDINGLY. adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

GA'DFLY. n. f. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad, it is called goadfly. Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon gab, and fly.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about;
the breeze.

The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swimmeth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds. Bacon's Nat. History.

Light fly his slumbers, if perchance a flight
Of angry gadflies fasten on the herd. Thomson.

GAFF. n. f. A harpoon or large hook.
Ainsworth.

GA'FFER. n. f. [gæfene, companion,
Saxon.] A word of respect, now obsolete, or applied only in contempt to a mean person.

For gaffer Treadwell told us by the bye,
Excessive sorrow is exceeding dry. Guy's Paff.

GA'FFLES. n. f. [gafelucar, spears, Sax.]
1. Artificial spurs put upon cocks when they are set to fight.

2. A steel lever to bend crossbows. Ainsw.

To GAG. v. n. [from gagbel, Dutch, the palate, Ainsworth.] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.

He's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

There foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound. Pope.

GAG. n. f. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.

Some, when the kids their dams too deeply drain,

With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain.
Dryden.

Your woman would have run up stairs before me; but I have secured her below with a gag in her chaps. Dryden.

GAGE. n. f. [gage, French.]

1. A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

He, when the shamed shield of slain Sansfoy
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory from him snatch away.

Fairy Queen.

There I throw my gage,
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty. Shaksp.

There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Shaksp. Rich. 3.

They from their mothers' breasts poor orphans
rend,

Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandys.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it.

But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou should'st wed the main,

Heav'n, as a gage, would cast some previous thing,

And therefore doom'd that Lawson should be slain. Dryden.

In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments that gain it assent, are the vouchers and gages of its probability. Locke.

2. A measure; a rule of measuring.

One judges, as the weather dictates, right
The poem is at noon, and wrong at night;
Another judges by a surer gage,
An author's principles or parentage. Young.

To GAGE. v. a. [gager, French.]

1. To wager; to depone as a wager; to impawn; to give as a caution, pledge, or security.

A moiety competent
Was gaged by our king. Shaksp. Hamlet.

He found the Turkish merchants making merry: unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him. Knutles' History.

2. To bind by some caution or surety; to engage.

My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged. Shaksp.

3. To measure; to take the contents of any vessel of liquids particularly. More properly gauge. See GAUGE.

We shall see your bearing.

—Nay, but I bar to night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night. Shaksp.

To GA'GGLE. v. n. [gagen, gagelen,
Dutch.] To make a noise like a goose.

Birds plume their feathers, geese gaggle, and crows seem to call upon rain; which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air.
Bacon's Natural History.

May fat geese gaggle with melodious voice,
And ne'er want gooseberries or apple-sauce.

King.

GA'ILY. adv. [from gay.]

1. Airily; cheerfully.

2. Splendidly. See GAYLY.

GAIN. n. f. [gain, French.]

1. Profit; advantage; contrary to loss.

But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Phil.

Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victory should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general consent. Raleigh.

Havock and spoil, and ruin are my gain.
Milton.

It is in praise of men as in gettings and gains;
for light gains make heavy purges; for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then. Bacon's Essays.

This must be made by some governor upon his own private account, who has a great stock that he is content to turn that way, and is invited by the gains. Temple.

Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,
Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryden

Polly fights for kings or dives for gain. Pope.

2. Interest; lucrative views.

That, fit, which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shakespeare

3. Unlawful advantage.

Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I lent unto you? 2 Corinthians
If pride, if envy, if the lust of gain,
If mad ambition in thy bosom reign,
Thou boast'st, alas! thy sober sense in vain. Fitzgerald.

4. Overplus in a comparative computation; any thing opposed to loss.

To GAIN. v. a. [gagner, French.]

1. To obtain as profit or advantage.

Egypt became a gained ground by the muddy and limaceous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees into a firm land. Brown

He gains, to live as man,
Higher degree of life. Milton.
What reinforcement we may gain from hope. Milton.

2. To win; not to lose.

A leper once he lost, and gain'd a king. Milton.

3. To have the overplus in comparative computation.

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. To obtain; to procure, to receive.

I acceptance found, which gain'd
This answer from the gracious voice divine. Milton.

That side from small reflection gains
Of glum'ring air; less vex'd with tempest loud. Milton.

If such a tradition were endeavoured to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult to conceive however it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson's Sermons.

For fame with toil we gain, but lose with ease,
Sure come to vex, but never all to please. Pope.

5. To obtain increase of any thing allotted.

I know that ye would gain the time, because ye see the king is gone from me. Daniel.

6. To obtain whatever, good or bad.

Ye should not have looked from Crete, and have gained this harm and loss. Acts

7. To win against opposition.

They who were sent to the other parts, after a short resistance, gained it. London.

For fees from the detested Umbrian draws,
And only gains the wealthy client's cause. Dryd.

O lose for Sylvia let me gain the prize,
And make my tongue victorious as her eyes. Pope.

8. To draw into any interest or party.

Come, with presents, laden from the post,
To gratify the queen and gain the court. Dryden.

It Pyrrhus will be wrought to pity,
No woman's art is better than yourself:
If you gain him, I shall comply of course. A. Phillips

9. To obtain as a wooer.

He never shall find out his mate, but such
A fortune misfortune brings him, or mistake,
Or whom he wishes most shall seldom gain
Through her perverseness, but shall see her gain'd
By a far woe. Milton.

10. To reach; to attain.

The wet still glimmers with some streaks of days

Now spurs the lated traveller space,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Death was the post, which I almost did gain:
Shall I once more be tost into the main? Walter.

Sun! found his praise
In thy eternal course, both when thou clim'st,
And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st. Milton.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it. Addison on Italy.

Thus sav'd from death, they gain the Phœtæan shores,
With shatter'd vessels and disabled oars. Pope.

11. To GAIN over. To draw to another party or interest.

The court of Hanover should have endeavoured to gain over those who were represented as their enemies. Swift.

To GAIN. v. n.

1. To grow rich; to have advantage; to be advanced in interest or happiness.

Thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortions. Ezekiel.

2. To encroach; to come forward by de- grees: with on.

When watchful herons leave their watry stand,
And mounting upward with erected flight,
Gain on the skies, and soar above the fight. Dryden's Virgil.

So on the land, while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains. Pope.

3. To get ground; to prevail against: with on.

The English have not only gained upon the Venetians in the Levant, but have their cloth in Venice itself. Addison.

4. To obtain influence with: with on.

My good behaviour had gained so far on the emperor, that I began to conceive hopes of liberty. Swift.

GAIN. adj. [An old word now out of use.] Handy; ready; dexterous.

Preface to the Accidence.

GAINER. n. f. [from gain.] One who receives profit or advantage.

The client, besides retaining a clear conscience, is always a gainer, and by no means can be at any loss, as feeling, if the composition be over-hard, he may relieve himself by recourse to his oath. Bacon.

If what I get in empire
I lose in fame, I think myself no gainer. Drake's Sophy

He that loses any thing, and gets wisdom by it, is a gainer by the loss. L'Estrange

By trade, we are as great gainers by the commodities of other countries as of our own nations. Addison's Freeholder.

GAINFUL. adj. [gain and full]

1. Advantageous; profitable.

He will dazzle his eyes, and bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase, some rich match, or advantageous project. South.

2. Lucrative; productive of money.

Nor knows he merchants gainful care. Dryden.

Mum's muse commodious precepts gives,
Instructive to the swains, nor wholly bent
On what is gainful: sometimes she diverts
From solid counsels. Philips.

GAINFULLY. adv. [from gainful.] Pro- fitably; advantageously.

GAINFULNESS. n. f. [from gainful.] Profit; advantage.

GAINING. n. f. [gainst and give.] The same as misgiving; a giving against: as gainfaying, which is still in use, is saying against, or contradicting.

It is but foolery; but it is such kind of gain-giving as would, perhaps, trouble a woman. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

GA'INLESS. adj. [from gain.] Unpro- fitable; producing no advantage.

GA'INLESSNESS. n. f. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainlessness as well as laboriousness of the work: miners, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the insatiable miser. Dreay of Pity.

GA'INLY. adv. [from gain.] Handily; readily; dexterously. Out of use.

To GA'INSAY. v. a. ['gainst and say.]

1. To contradict; to oppose; to contro- vert with; to dispute against.

Speeches which gainsay one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject. Hooker.

Too facile then, thou didst not much gainsay;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton.

2. To deny any thing.

I never heard yet
That any of those bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gainsay what they did,
Than to perform it first. Shakspeare's Winter Tale.

GAINSA'YER. n. f. [from gainsay.] Op- ponent; adversary.

Such as may satisfy gainsayers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the same at our hands. Hooker.

We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest gainsayers of scripture, even in that which we read for scripture unto the people. Hooker.

It was full matter of conviction to all gainsayers. Hammond.

Others sought themselves a name by being his gainsayers, but failed of their purpose. Fell.

'GAINST. prep. [for against.] See AGAINST.

Tremble, ye nations! who, secure before, Laugh'd at those aims, that gains'd ourselves we hate. Dryden.

To GA'INSTAND. v. a. ['gainst and stand.]

To withstand; to oppose; to resist. A proper word, but not in use.

Love proved himself valiant, that dust with the sword of recent duty gainstand the force of so many enraged desires. Sidney.

GA'IRISH. adj. [geappian, to dress fine, Saxon.]

1. Gaudy; showy; splendid; fine.

Three or four wild outrage in apparel, huge hofe, monstrous hats, and gairish colours. Ascham.

I could see then poor shadow, painted queen,
The pretension of but what I was;
A mother only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast, a gairish flash.
To be the aim of every dangerous shot. Shakspeare.

There in close covert by some brook,
Where no profane eye may look,
Hide me from day's gairish eye. Milton.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.

Fame and glory transport a man out of himself; it makes the mind loose and gairish;
scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of diffusion upon all the faculties. South.

GA'IRISHNESS. n. f. [from gairish.]

1. Finery; flaunting gaudiness.

2. Flighty or extravagant joy.

Let your hope be without vanity, or gairishness, of spirit, but sober, grave, and silent. Taylor.

GAIT. n. f. [gat, Dutch.]

1. A way: as, gang your gait.

Good youth, address thy gait unto her;
Be not denied access, stand at her door. Shakspeare.

2. March; walk.

Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,
And all her vain allacements did forsake. Fairy Queen.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait.
Hubbard's Tale.

3. The manner and air of walking.

Great Juno comes; I know her by her gait.
Shakespeare.
He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion.
Clarendon.

A third, who, by his gait
And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell.
Milton.

Leviathans
Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait.
Milton.

I describ'd his way,
Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait.
Milton.

GALA'GE. n. f. A shepherd's clog. Not in use.

My heart-blood is well-nigh frozen, I feel;
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser.

GALA'NGAL. n. f. [galange, French.] A medicinal root.

The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acid and pungent taste. Hill.

GALAXY. n. f. [γαλαξία; galaxie, Fr.] The milky way; a stream of light in the sky, consisting of many small stars.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy. Milton's Par. Lost.

A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Clarendon.
Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

We dare not undertake to show what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy. Bentley.

GALBANUM. n. f. A resinous gum.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops of tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour; its smell is strong and disagreeable. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant. Hill.

I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Ecclus.

GALE. n. f. [gahling, hally, sudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona?
Shakespeare.

Winds
Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd
From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells.
Milton.

Fresh gales and gentle air.
Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside. Addison.

GA'LEATED. adj. [galeatus, Latin.]

1. Covered as with a helmet.

A galeated helmet copped, and in shape somewhat more conical than any of the foregoing.
Woodward on Fossils.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling a helmet, as the monkshood.

GALER'ICULATE. adj. [from galerus, Lat.] Covered as with a hat.

GA'LIOT. n. f. [galotte, French.] A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very light and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three patereroes. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar. Diff.

Bonaparte sent two notable pirates with thirty galottes, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered, and forced again to their galottes. Kneller's History.

GAILL. n. f. [zeala, Sax. galle, Dut.]

1. The bile, an animal juice remarkable for its suppos'd bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gail, you murdering min-nisters! Shakespeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.
This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb implies. It's as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing gustable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet favour. Harvey.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk: Berthave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success. Arbuthnot's Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shakespeare.

Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste! Shakespeare.

She still insults, and you must still adore;
Giant that the honey's much, the gall is more.
Dryden's Juvenal.

4. Rancour; malignity.

They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people. Spenser on Ireland.

5. Anger; bitterness of mind.

Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the blow. Prior.

6. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [from the verb.]

This is the fatallest wound; as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch. Government of the Tongue.

7. [from galla.]

Galls or gallnuts are preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have oriental and European galls: the oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are lighter, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort. The general history of galls is this: An insect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus secured from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg, which, as soon as it is in its wing'd state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation shall be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrescences which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true galls, though less firm in their texture. Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed. Ray.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Derham.

TO GALL. v. a. [galer, French.]

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
His yoke is easy, when by us embraced;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast. Dryden.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with calling his eyes upon all things. Lact.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious thus, and interrupting spoke,
Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain. Pope's Iliad.

2. To impair; to wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that my state being gall'd with my expense,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakespeare.
If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses. Ray.

3. To tease; to fret; to vex.

In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hosker.

What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleases us the better, if we espy that it *gall*eth them. Hosker.

When I shew justice,
I pity those I do not know;
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall. Shakespeare.

All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

No man commits any sin but his conscience smites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it. Tillotson.

4. To harass; to mischief; to keep in a state of uneasiness.

The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them. Sidney.

Light demerces from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leather thongs, to gall the foe. Dryden's Æneid.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows. Addison.

TO GALL. v. n. To fret.

I have seen you gleecking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakespeare.

GA'LLANT. adj. [galant, French; from gala, fine dress, Spanish.]

1. Gay; well dressed; showy; splendid; magnificent.

A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no gaily with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby. Lyttel.

The gay, the wife, the gallant, and the grave,
Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have. Waller.

2. Brave; high-spirited; daring; magnanimous.

Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough. Sidney.

But, fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth. Shakespeare.

A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight. Digby.

3. Fine; noble; spacious.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant show and promise of their mettle.

Shakespeare.

4. Courty with respect to ladies.

He discoursed, how gallant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress.

Clarendon.

When first the soul of love is sent abroad,
The gay troops begin

In gallant thought to plume their painted wings.

Thomson.

GALLANT. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man.

The new proclamation.

—What is 't for?

—The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylor.

Shakespeare.

The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vastus.

Knotter.

The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their fauchions brandish'd at the grisly sight.

Dryden.

Gallants, look to 't, you say there are no
sprights;

But I'll come dance about your beds at nights.

Dryden.

2. A whoremaster, who carresses women to debauch them.

One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant.

Shakespeare.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant.

Addison's Spectator.

3. A wooer; one who courts a woman for marriage. In the two latter senses it has commonly the accent on the last syllable.

GALLANTLY. adv. [from gallant.]

1. Gayly; splendidly.

2. Bravely; nobly; generously.

You have not dealt so gallantly with us as we did with you in a parallel case: last year a paper was brought here from England, which we ordered to be burnt by the common hangman.

Swift.

GALLANTRY. n. f. [galanterie, French.]

1. Splendour of appearance; show; magnificence; glittering grandeur; ostentatious finery.

Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all
The English youth flock to their admiral.

Waller.

2. Bravery; nobleness; generosity.

The eminence of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and ennobling study of nature.

Glanville's Sceptis, Preface.

3. A number of gallants.

Hector, Drifobus, and all the gallantry of Troy, I would have arm'd to-day.

Shakespeare.

4. Courtship; refined address to women.

The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd,
Invent new arts to make their charmers kind.

Glanville.

5. Vitious love; lewdness; debauchery.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a prostitute; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins.

Swift.

GALLEASS. n. f. [galeas, Fr.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. To carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns. DiA.

My father hath no less

Than three great argosies, besides two galleasses,
And twelve tight gallees.

Shakespeare.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galleasses.

Addison.

GALLE'ON. n. f. [galion, French.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk, or set on fire by the Spanish galleons.

Raleigh's Apology.

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers or castles.

Bacon's Hist. with Spain.

GALLERY. n. f. [galerie, French; derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow.

Sidney.

High lifted up were many lofty towers,
And goodly galleries fair overlaid.

Spenser.

Your gallery

Have we pass'd through, not without much content.

Shakespeare.

The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupolas.

Bacon.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known.

Denham.

Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish churches of London are driving space, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them.

Graunt.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches.

Addison.

2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

While all its throngs the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends.

Pope.

GALLETYLE. n. f. I suppose this word has the same import with gallopot.

Make a compound body of glass and galley; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcodon, being a flint between a porcelaine and a glass.

Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GALLEY. n. f. [galca, Italian; galere, French; derived as some think, from galca, a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from galdere, the swordfish; as others from gallean, expressing in Syriac men exposed to the sea. From galley come galkasi, gallean, galist.]

1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load
Of ships, hulks, *galley*s, barks, and brigandines.

Fairfax.

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, by the use of *galley*s, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean.

Bauch's New Atlantic.

Jafon ranged the coasts of Asia the Left in an open boat or kind of galley. Raleigh's History.

On oozy ground his *galley*s roared;

Their heads are turn'd to sea, their stems to shore.

Dryden.

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtships every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the *galley*s for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure.

South.

GALLEY-SLAVE. n. f. [galley and slave.]

A man condemned for some crime to row in the *galley*s.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor men, he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy.

Bramhall.

Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission.

Decay of Piety.

The furies gently dash against the shore,
Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar.

Gerrick.

GALLIARD. n. f. [gaillard, French; imagined to be derived from the Gaulish ard, genius; and gay.]

1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.

Seiden is a gaillard by himself.

Cleveland.

2. An active, nimble, spritely dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a gaillard.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

There's nought in France

That can be with a nimble gaillard won:

You cannot revel into dukedoms there.

Shaks.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long gaillards.

Bacon.

The tripl's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when gaillard time and measure time are in the melody of one dance.

Bacon.

GALLIARDE. n. f. [French.] Merriment; exuberant gayety. Not in use.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watery sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliarde of company.

Brown's Rel. Med.

GALLICISM. n. f. [gallicisme, French; from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he beld this conduct; he beld the same language that another had beld before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolingbroke.

In English I would have gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech.

Felton on the Clackets.

GALLIGASKINS. n. f. [Calige Gallo-Vasconum. Skinner.] Large open hose. Not used but in ludicrous language.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue,
An horrid chasm disclose.

Philips.

GALLIMATIA. n. f. [galimatias, Fr.] Nonsense; talk without meaning.

GALLIMAU'FRY. n. f. [gallimaufree, Fr.]

1. A hotch-potch, or hah of several sorts of broken meat; a medley.

Hammer.

GAL

They have made of our English tongue a galimaufry, or hodge-podge of all other speeches.

Spenser.

2. Any inconsistent or ridiculous medley.

They have a dance, which the wenches say is a galimaufry of gambols, because they are not in't.

Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

The painter, who, under pretence of diverting the eyes, would fill his picture with such varieties as alter the truth of history, would make a ridiculous piece of painting, and a mere galimaufry of his work.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. It is used by Shakspeare ludicrously of a woman.

Sir John affects thy wife.

—Why, sir, my wife is not young.

—He woos both high and low, both rich and poor;

He loves thy galimaufry friend.

Shakspeare.

GA'LLIOT. n. f. [galiotte, French.] A small swift galley.

Barbarossa departing out of Hellespontus with eighty gallees and certain galliots, shaped his course towards Italy.

Knotes's History.

GA'LLIPOT. n. f. [gleye, Dutch, shining earth. Skinner. The true derivation is from gala, Spanish, finery. Gala, or gallypot, is a fine painted pot.] A pot painted and glazed, commonly used for medicines.

Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gallipots, that had on the outside apes, owls, and satyrs; but within, precious drugs.

Bacon's Aphorisms.

Here phials in nice discipline are set;

There gallipots are rang'd in alphabet.

Garrh.

Alexandrian thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallipot to any man.

Spectator.

Thou that dost Æsculapius decide,

And o'er his gallipots in triumph ride.

Fenton.

GA'LLON. n. f. [gelo, low Latin.] A liquid measure of four quarts.

Beat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopp'd.

Wijeman's Surgery.

GALLOON. n. f. [galon, French.] A kind of close lace made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

To GALLOP. v. n. [galoper, French.] Derived by all the etymologists, after Budaus, from καλῶς; but perhaps it comes from gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed.]

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear

The galloping of horse: who was't come by?

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

His steeds will be restrain'd,

But gallop lively down th' western hill.

Danue.

In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain

His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,

When half surpris'd, and fearing to be seen,

The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen.

Dryden's Virgil.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threatened a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them.

Sidney.

They 'gan espy

An armed knight towards them gallop fast,

That seem'd from some seated foe to fly.

Fairy Queen.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed.

Locke.

3. To move very fast.

GAL

The golden sun

Gallops the zodiac in his glit'ring coach.

Shaks.

Whom dost thou gallop withal?

—With a thief to the gallows.

Shakspeare.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it.

Locke.

GALLOP. n. f. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forward, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once.

Farrier's Dict.

GA'LOPER. n. f. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

To GA'LOW. v. a. [axelpen, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wasteful flies

Gallop the very wand'ers of the dark,

And make them keep their caves.

Shakspeare.

GA'LOWAY. n. f. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the north; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

GA'LOWASSES. n. f.

1. It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen the Irish call gallowassers: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallogla signifies an English servitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armatura; and was instead of the footmen that now wear a corset, before the corset was used, or almost invented.

Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hanner, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r
Of gallowassers and stout kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array.

Shaks.

GA'LOW. } n. f. [It is used by some in GA'LLOWS. } the singular; but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowyses. Galgo, Goth.
zealga, Saxon; galge, Dutch; which some derive from galalus furca, Latin; others from גלגל high, others from gallu, Welsh, power; but it is probably derived like gallows, to fright, from axelpen, the gallows being the great object of legal terror.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money.

Sidney.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of galkers and gallowyses.

Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

I prophesied if a gallows were on land,

This fellow could not drown.

Shakspeare.

GAM

He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected.

Hayward.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of waists while he is upon Tyburn road.

Swift.

Cupid hath been five thousand years a boy.

—Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too.

Shakspeare.

GA'LLOWSFREE. adj. [gallows and free.]

Exempt by destiny from being hanged.

Let him be gallowsfree by my consent,
And nothing sadder, since he nothing meant.

Dryden.

GA'LLOWTREE. n. f. [gallow and tree.]

The tree of terror; the tree of execution.

He hung their conquer'd arms, for more defame,
On gallowtrees, in honour of his dearest dame.

Spenser.

A Scot, when from the gallowtree got loose,
Drops into Styx, and turns a island ghoose.

Cleveland.

GAMBA'DE. } n. f. [gamba, Italian, a GAMBA'DO. } leg.] Spatterdashies; boots worn upon the legs above the shoe.

The pettifogger ambles to her in his gambushes once a week.

Dennis's Letters.

GAMBLER. n. f. [A cant word, I suppose, for game or gamester.] A knave whose practice it is to invite the unwary to game and cheat them.

GAMBOGE. n. f. A concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature, heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America and the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambugia.

Hill.

To GAMBOL. v. n. [gambiller, Fr.]

1. To dance; to skip; to frisk; to jump for joy; to play merry frolicks.

Bears, tigers, ounces, pards,

Gambol'd before them.

Milton's Par. Lost.

The king of elfs, and little fairy queen,
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green.

Dryden.

The monsters of the flood
Gambol around him in the wat'ry way,
And heavy whales in awkward measures play.

Bope.

2. To leap; to start.

'Tis not madness
That I have utter'd; being nie to the test,
And I the matter will record, which madness
Would gambol from.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

GAM'VOL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A skip; a hop; a leap for joy.

A gentleman had got a favourite spaniel, that would be still toying and leaping upon him, and playing a thousand pretty gambols.

L'Estrange.

Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,
And beats in gambols lust'd before their honest god.

Dryden.

2. A frolick; a wild prank.

For who did ever play his gambols,
With such unsufferable ramblings?

Hudibras.

GAM'BREL. n. f. [from gamba, gambarella, Italian.] The leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mixed as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? as appears by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambrel, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back.

Crow.

GAME. n. f. [gaman, a jeft, Iſlandick.]

1. Sport of any kind.

We have had paſtimes here, and pleaſing game.

Shakſpeare.

2. Jeſt: oppoſed to earneſt or ſeriouſneſs.

Then on her head they ſet a garland green,

And crowned her 'twiſt earneſt and 'twiſt game.

Spencer.

3. Insolent merriment; sportive insult.

Do they not ſeek occaſion of new quarrels,

On my refusal, to diſtreſs me more;

Or make a game of my calamities?

Milton.

4. A single match at play.

5. Advantage in play.

Mutual vouchers for our ſame we ſtand,

And play the game into each other's hand.

Dryd.

6. Scheme purſued; meaſures planned.

This ſeems to be the preſent game of that crown, and that they will begin no other 'till they ſee an end of this.

Temple.

7. Field ſports: as, the chace, falconry.

If about this hour he make his way,

Under the colour of his uſual game,

He ſhall here find his friends with horſe and men,

To ſet him free from his captivity.

Shakſpeare.

What arms to uſe, or nets to frame

Wild beaſts to combat, or to tame,

With all the myſ'tries of that game.

Waller.

Some ſportſmen, that were abroad upon game,

ſped a company of buſſards and cranes.

L'Eſtrange.

8. Animals purſued in the field; animals appropriated to legal ſportſmen.

Hunting, and men, not beaſts, ſhall be his game.

With war, and hoſtile ſnare, ſuch as reſuſe

Subjection to his empire tyrannous.

Milton.

There is ſuch a variety of game ſpringing up before me, that I know not which to follow.

Dryden's Fables, Preface.

A bloodhound will follow the perſon he pur-ſues, and all hounds the particular game they have in chace.

Arbuthnot.

Go, with thy Cynthia hurt the pointed ſpear

At the rough bear, or chace the flying deer;

I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,

At human hearts we ſling, nor ever miſs the game.

Prior.

Proud Nimrod firſt the bloody chace began,

A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:

Our haughty Norman boatts that barb'rous name,

And makes his trembling ſlaves the royal game.

Pope.

Shorten my labour, if its length you blame,

For, grow but wiſe, you rob me of my game.

Young.

9. Solemn conteſts, exhibited as ſpectacles to the people.

The games are done, and Cæſar is returning.

Shakſpeare.

Milo, when ent'ring the Olympick game,

With a huge ox upon his ſhoulders came.

Denham.

To GAME. v. n. [gaman, Saxon.]

1. To play at any ſport.

2. To play wantonly and extravagantly for money.

Gaming leaves no ſatisfaction behind it: it no way profits either body or mind.

Locke.

GA'MECK. n. f. [game and cock.] A cock bred to fight.

They manage the diſpute as fiercely as two gamecocks in the pit.

Locke.

GA'ME-EGG. n. f. [game and egg.] An

Thus boys hatch game-cocks under birds of prey,

To make the fowl more furious for the fray.

Garth.

GA'MEKEEPER. n. f. [game and keep.] A perſon who looks after game, and ſees

it is not deſtroyed.

GA'MESOME. adj. [from game.] Frolick-ſome; gay; ſportive; playful; ſportful.

Geron, though old, yet gameſome, kept one end with Coſma.

Sidney.

I am not gameſome; I do lack ſome part

Of that quick ſpirit that is in Antony.

Shakſp.

The gam ſome wind among her truſties play,

And curleth up thoſe growing riches ſhort.

Fairfax.

Belial, in like gameſome mood.

Milton.

This gameſome humour of children ſhould rather be encouraged, to keep up their ſpirits and improve their ſtrength and health, than curbed or reſtrained.

Locke.

GA'MESOMENESS. n. f. [from gameſome.]

Sportiveſneſs; merriment.

GA'MESOMELY. adv. [from gameſome.]

Merrily.

GA'MESTER. n. f. [from game.]

1. One who is vitiouſly addicted to play.

Keep a gameſter from the dice, and a good ſtudent from his book, and it is wonderful.

Shakſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

A gameſter, the greater maſter he is in his art,

the worſe man he is.

Bacon.

Gameſters for whole patrimonies play;

The ſteward brings the deeds, which muſt convey

The whole eſtate.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Could we look into the mind of a common gameſter, we ſhould ſee it full of nothing but trumps and matadors: her flumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves.

Addiſon.

All the ſuperſtuous whims relate,

That fill a female gameſter's pate;

What agony of ſoul ſhe feels

To ſee a knave's inverted heels.

Swift.

Her youngſt daughter is run away with a gameſter, a man of great beauty, who in dreſſing and dancing has no ſuperior.

Law.

2. One who is engaged at play.

When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,

The gentle gameſter is the ſooner winner.

Shakſp.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes

ſee no more than one; or that a gameſter ſeeth always more than a looker-on: but, when all is done, the help of good counſil is that which

ſetteth buſineſs ſtrait.

Bacon.

3. A merry frolickſome perſon.

You're a merry gameſter,

My lord Sands.

Shakſpeare's Henry VIII.

4. A prostitute. Not in uſe.

She's impudent, my lord,

And was a common gameſter to the camp.

Shakſpeare.

GA'MMER. n. f. [of uncertain etymology;

An old play.

GA'MMON. n. f. [gambone, Italian.]

1. The buttock of a hog ſalted and dried;

the lower end of the ſtitch.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was ſold:

A ruſty gammon of ſome ſeven years old.

Dryd.

Gameſons, that give a reliſh to the taſte,

And potted fowl, and fiſh, come in ſo faſt,

That ere the fiſt is out, the ſecond ſinks.

Dryd.

2. A kind of play with dice.

The quick dice,

In thunder leaping from the box, awake

The ſounding gammon.

Thomſon's Autumn.

GA'MUT. n. f. [gama, Italian.] The ſcale of muſical notes.

Maſter, before you touch the inſtrument,

To learn the order of my fingering,

I muſt begin with rudiments of art,

To teach you gamut in a briefer ſort.

Shakſpeare.

When by the gamut ſome muſicians make

A perfect ſong, others will undertake,

By the ſame gamut chang'd, to equal it:

Things ſimply good can never be uſt.

Donne.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the ſtage,

That ran by out, and through the gamut rage;

In ſongs and airs expreſs their martial fire,

Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire.

Addiſon.

'GAN, for began, from 'gin for begin.

The noble knight 'gan feel

His vital force to faint.

Spencer.

To GANCH. v. a. [ganciare, from gancio,

a hook, Italian; ganche, French.] To drop from a high place upon books, by way of puniſhment: a practice in Turkey, to which Smith alludes in his Pocockius.

Mortimer.

To GANG. v. n. [ganga, Dutch;

gangan, Saxon; gang, Scottiſh.] To go; to walk. An old word not now uſed, except ludicrously.

But let them gang alone,

As they have brewed, ſo let them bear blame.

Spencer.

Your flaunting beaus gang with their breaths

open.

Arbuthnot.

GANG. n. f. [from the verb.] A number herding together; a troop; a company;

a tribe; a herd. It is ſeldom uſed but in contempt or abhorrence.

O, you pandery rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conſpiracy againſt me.

Shakſpeare.

As a gang of thieves were ſobbing a houſe,

a maſtiff ſett a barking.

L'Eſtrange.

Admitted in among the gang,

He ſets and talks as they befriend him.

Pope.

GANGHON. n. f. [French.] A kind of flower.

Amſworſth.

GA'NGLION. n. f. [γανγλιον.] A tumour

in the tendinous and nervous parts.

other crude tumour or preternatural protuberance of ſome part of a joint.

Wiſeman.

To GA'NGRENATE. v. a. [from gan- grene.] To produce a gangrene; to mortify.

Parts cauterized, gangrenated, ſiderated, and mortified, become black, the radical moiſture or vital ſulphur ſuffering an extinction.

To GA'NGRENE. v. n. To become mortified.

Wounds immedicable
Rankle and fester, and gangrene.

To black mortification. Milton's Agonistes.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out.

Wise man's Surgery.

GA'NGRENOUS. adj. [from gangrene.] Mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hæmorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous. Arbuthnot.

GA'NTLET. } rupted from gantelope;
gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch.]
A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man.

But would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,

Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose,

To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes? Dryd.

Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes. Locke.

GA'NZÁ. n. f. [ganza, Spanish, a goose.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuoso was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

They are but idle dreams and fancies,
And favour strongly of the ganza's. Hudibras.

GAOL. n. f. [geol, Welsh; geole, French.] A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and too often written jail, and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goal.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

Have I been ever free, and mult my house

By my retentive enemy, my goal? Shakspeare.

If we meant to thrive and do good, break open the goals, and let out the prisoners. Shakspeare.

To GAOL. v. a. [from the noun.] To imprison; to commit to gaol.

Gasting vagabonds was chargeable, peevish, and of no open example. Bacon.

GA'OLDELIVERY. n. f. [gaol and delivery.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then duth'th' aspring soul the body leave,
Which we call death; but were it known to ail,
What life our souls do by this death receive,
Men would at birth of gaol-delivery call. Darwin.

These make a general gaol-delivery of souls, not for punishment. South.

GA'OLER. n. f. [from gaol.] Keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when

The fabled gaoler is the friend of men. Shakspeare.

I know not how or why my fury gaoler,

Hard as his iron, and insolent as power

When put in vulgar hands, cleaveth,

Put off the brute. Dryden's Cleomenes.

From the polite part of mankind she had been banished and injured, 'till the death of her gaoler. Tatler.

GAP. n. f. [from gape.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.

Behold the despair,

By custom and covetous pates;

By gap and opening of gates. Toffler's Husbandry.

With tedious and with furies to the bounds

And crystal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide,

Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclosed

Into the wasteful deep. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Bushes are most failing of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps. Mortimer's Husbandry.

I fought for a man, says God, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, for the land that I should not destroy it. Rogers.

2. A breach.

The lust of that city concerned the christian commonwealth; manifold miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap to all that side of christendom. Knox.

3. Any passage.

So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood. Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.

The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deserved, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stopped. Spenser.

5. A hole; a deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Nor is it any boteh or gap in the works of nature. Morse.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.

Each one demand, and answer to his part

Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first

We were sever'd. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,

Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras.

One can receive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more devious in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift.

7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other. Pope.

8. To step a GAP. To escape by some mean thist: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, till the quicksets will grow.

His policy consists in setting traps,
In finding ways and means, and stepping gaps. Swift.

9. To stand in the GAP. To make defence; to expose himself for the protection of something in danger.

What would become of the church, if there were none more concerned for her rights than this? Who would stand in the gap? Leffey.

GAP-TOOTHED. adj. [gap and tooth.]

Having interstices between the teeth.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other, as much as the mincing lady prioress and the broad speaking approched wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

To GAPE. v. n. [geapan, Saxon.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat. Shakspeare.

Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour. Arbuthnot.

She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,
And asks if it be time to die. Swift.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

As callow birds,

Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey,

Cry in their nest, and think her long away:

And at each least that stirs, each blast of wind,

Gape for the food which they must never find. Dryden.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,

And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,

Then first the market meets it in the sky,

And with wet wings, joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.

3. To desire earnestly; to crave; with for.

To her grim death appears in all her shapes;

The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes. Denham.

To thy fortune be not thou a slave;

For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?

And thou, who gap'st for my estate; draw near;

For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryd.

4. With after.

What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping after court-favour and preferments? L'Estrange.

5. With at.

Many have gaped at the church revenues; but before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopped in the church-yard. South.

6. To open in fissures or holes.

If it affame my noble father's person,

I'll speak to it though tell itself should gape

And bid me hold my peace. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,

Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

The great horse-mussel, with one fine shell,

doth gape and shut as the oysters do. Bacon.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven or the refreshments of a shower. South.

The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vessels. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

7. To open with a breach.

The planks, their patchy coverings wash'd away,

Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:

The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,

Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryden.

That all these actions can be performed by aliment, as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbuthnot.

8. To open; to have an hiatus.

There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on a another for want of a cæura in this poem. Dryden.

9. To make a noise with open throat.

And, if my mule can through past ages lee,

That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he. Recommen.

10. To stare with hope or expectation.

Others will gape at anticipate

The cabinet designs of fate;

Apply to wizards, to forer

What shall, and what shall never be. Hudibras.

11. To stare with wonder.

Parts of different species jumbled together according to the mad imagination of the dawner;

and the end of all this to cause laughter: a very monster in a Bartholomew fair, for the mob to gape at. Dryden's Discrepancy.

Where elevated o'er the gaping crowd,
Clasp'd in the heard the perjurd head is bow'd,

12. To stare irreverently.

They have gaped upon me with the r mouth. South.

GA'PER. n. f. [from gape.]

1. One who opens his mouth.

2. One who starts foolishly.

3. One who longs or craves.

The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth.

Carroll's Survey of Cornwall.

GAR, in Saxon, signifies a weapon; Eadgar is a happy weapon; Ethelgar, a noble weapon. Gibson's Camden.

To GAR, v. a. [giera, Islandick.] To cause; to make. Obsolete. It is still used in Scotland.

Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?
Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lads forlorn. Spenser.

GARB, n. f. [garbe, French.]

1. Dress; clothes; habit.

Thus Belial, with words cloth'd in reason's garb,
Counsel'd ignoble ease and peaceful sloth.

Milton.

He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physick, and sets up. L'Estrange.

2. Fashion of dress.

Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their cloaths did wear.

Denham.

3. Exterior appearance.

This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth as-fect

A saucy roughness and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GARBAGE, n. f. [garbear, Spanish. This etymology is very doubtful.] The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.

The cloyed will,
That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb, Longs after for the garbage. Shakespeare.

Lust, though to a radiant angel link'd
Will fate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A clam more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old usury and aug'ry,
That out of garbage of cattle

Presag'd th' events of truce or battle. Hudibras.
Who without aversion, ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd?

Roscommon.

When your rective condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage.
Dryden.

GARBEL, n. f. A plank next the keel of a ship. Bailey.

GARBIDGE, } n. f. Corrupted from GARBISH, } garbage.

All shavings of horns, hoofs of cattle, blood,
and garbridge, is good manure for land. Mortimer.

In Newfoundland they improve their ground with the garbish of fish. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GARBLE, v. a. [garbellare, Italian.] To sift; to part; to separate the good from the bad.

But you who fathers and traditions take,
And garble some, and some you quite forsake.
Dryden.

Had our author 'et down this command, without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, it had made directly against him. Locke.

The understanding works to collate, combine, and garble the images and ideas, the imagination and memory present to it. Locke.

GARBLER, n. f. [from garble.] He who separates one part from another.

A farther secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it. Swift's Examiner.

GA'RHILL, n. f. [garbouille, French; garbuglio, Italian.] Disorder; tumult; uproar. Hammer.

Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read
What garbills the awak'd. Shakespeare.

GARD, n. f. [garde, French.] Ward-ship; care; custody.

GARDEN, n. f. [garde, Welsh; jardin, French; giardino, Italian.]

1. A piece of ground enclosed, and cultivated with extraordinary care, planted with herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure.

Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
Which one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next. Shakespeare.

My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holbourn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

In the royal ordering of gardens there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year. Bacon.
In every garden should be provided flowers,
fruit, shade and water. Temple.

My garden takes up half my daily care,
And my field asks the minutes I can spare. Marle.

2. A place particularly fruitful or delightful.

I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy. Shakespeare.

3. GARDEN is often used in composition for bortenfis, or belonging to a garden.

4. Garden-mould. Mould fit for a garden.
They delight most in rich black garden-mould, that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay. Mortimer.

5. Garden-tillage. Tillage used in cultivating gardens.

Peas and beans are what belong to garden-tillage as well as that of the field. Mortimer.

6. Garden-ware. The produce of gardens.
A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel. Mortimer.

To GARDEN, v. n. [from the noun.] To cultivate a garden; to lay out gardens.

At first, in Rome's peorage,
When both her kings and consuls held the plough,
Or garden'd well. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

When ages grow to civility and elegance, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection. Bacon.

GARDENER, n. f. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that if we plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will. Skaf.
Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips. Bacon.

The gardeners may lop religion as he pleases.
Howel.

The life and felicity of an excellent gardener is preferable to all other diversions. Evelyn.

Then let the learned gardener mark with care
The kinds of flocks, and what those kinds will bear. Dryden.

GARDENING, n. f. [from garden.] The art of cultivating or planning gardens.

My compositions in gardening are after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer elegancies of art. Speffator.

GARE, n. f. Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep. DiB.

GARGARISM, n. f. [gargariasmus; gargarisme, French.] A liquid form of medicine to wash the mouth with.

Quincy.
Apoplethmatisms and gargarisms draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacon.

To GARGARIZE, v. a. [gargariſo; gar-garifer, French.] To wash the mouth with medicated liquors.

Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargaris'd, doth ease the hicough; for that it is astringent,
and inhibiteth the motion of the spirit. Bacon.

This being relax'd, may make a shaking of the larynx; as when we gargarize. Haller.

GARGET, n. f. A distemper in cattle.

The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts. Mortimer's H. & C.

To GARGLE, v. a. [gargouiller, French; gargogliare, Italian; gurgel, German, the throat.]

1. To wash the throat with some liquor not suffered immediately to descend.

Gargle twice or thrice with sharp oxyrate.
Harvey.

The excision made, the bleeding will soon be stop'd by gargling with oxyrate. Wijeman.

They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
Next gargle well their throats. Dryden's Pers.

2. To warble; to play in the throat. An improper use.

Those which only warble long,
And gargle in their throats a song. Waller.
So charm'd you were, you ceas'd a while to
doat

On nonsense gargl'd in an eunuch's throat, Fenice.

G'RGLE, n. f. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.

His throat was washed with one of the gargies set down in the method of cure. Wijeman.

G'RGLION, n. f. An exudation of nervous juice from a bruise, or the like, which indurates into a hard immovable tumour. Quincy.

G'RGOL, n. f. A distemper in hogs.

The signs of the gargol in hogs are, hanging down of the head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite. Mortimer.

GARLAND, n. f. [garlande, guirland, French.]

1. A wreath of branches or flowers.

Stephen, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,
A garland made, on temples for to wear;
For he then chosen was the dignity

Of village-lord that Whitson-tide to bear. Sidney.
A reeling world will never stand upright,
'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

—How! wear the garland! dost thou mean the crown?

—Ay, my good lord. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Then party-colour'd flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head. Dryd.

Vanquish again; though she be gone,
Whose garland crown'd the victor's hair,
And reign; though she has left the throne,
Who made thy glory worth thy care. Prior.

For gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew. Pope.

2. The top; the principal; the thing most prized.

With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. Shakespeare.

GARLICK, n. f. [gar, Saxon, a lance; and leck, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinner. Allium, Latin.]

It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymbus on the top of the stalk; and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds. Miller.

Garlick is of an extremely strong smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is extremely active, as may be proved by applying plasters of garlick to the feet, which will give a strong smell to the breath. Med.

G A R

G A R

G A S

Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Temple.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a sacred pow'r:
Religious nations sure, and blest abodes,
Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods. Tate.

GARLICK Pear-tree. n. f.

This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit, which, when-ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, but a strong scent of garlick. Miller.

GARLICK Wild. n. f. A plant.

GARLICKEATER. n. f. [garlick and eat.] A mean fellow.

You've made good work,
You and your apron men, that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlickeaters. Shakspeare.

GARMENT. n. f. [guarniment, old French.]

Any thing by which the body is covered; clothes; dress.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Our leaf once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers. Raleigh.

Fairest thing that shines below,
Why in this robe dost thou appear?

Would'st thou, a while more perfect show,
Thou must at all no garment wear. Cowley.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,
And dy'd his garments with their scatter'd gore. Waller.

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed. Addison.

Let him that sues for the coat, i. e. the shirt, or inner garment, take the cloak also, is a proverbial phrase too; for in the truth of the letter, a suit is no likely matter of a lawsuit, and signifies an uncontested succurance of such small losses. Kettlewell.

GARNER. n. f. [grenier, French.] A place in which thrashed grain is stored up.

Earth's increase, and foyson plenty,
Barns and garners never empty. Shakspeare.

For sundry foes the rural realm surround;
The fieldmouse builds her garners under ground:
For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,
In winding mazes, works her hidden hole. Dryd.

To GARNER. v. a. [from the noun.]
To store as in garners.

There, where I have garners'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life. Shaks.

GARNET. n. f. [garnato, Italian; granatus, low Latin; from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegrana-te.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the saphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or politeness those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of bluish: its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby. Hill.

The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients; the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple. Woods.

To GARNISH. v. a. [garnir, French.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appen-dages.

There were hills which garnish'd their proud heights with stately trees. Sidney.

All within with flowers was garnish'd,
That, when mild Zephyrus amongst them blew,

VOL. I.

Did breathe out hounteous smells, and painted colourt shew. Spenser.

With taper light

To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shakspeare.

Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnish'd with fruits, delighting both the eye and the taste.
Raleigh.

All the streets were garnish'd with the citizens, standing in their liveries. Bacon's Henry vii.

2. To embellish a dish with something laid round it.

With what expence and art, how richly dress'd!
Garnish'd with 'paragus, himself a feast! Dryd.

No man lards salt pork with orange-peel,
Or garnish'd his lamb with spitcheuck'd eel.
King's Cookery.

3. To fit with fetters. A cant term.
GARNISH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

So are you, sweet,
Ev'n in the lovely garnish of a boy. Shakspeare.

Matter and figure they produce;
For garnish this, and that for use;
They seek to feed and please their guests. Prior.

2. Things strewed round a dish.

3. [In gaols.] Fetters. A cant term.

4. Penfucula carceraria; an acknowledgment in money when first a prisoner goes into a gaol. Ainsworth.

GARNISHMENT. n. f. [from garnish.]
Ornament; embellishment.

The church of Sancta Gustiniana in Padoua is a found piece of good art, where the materials being ordinary stone, without any garnishment of sculpture, ravish the beholders. Wotton.

GARNITURE. n. f. [from garnish.] Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in garniture of their knees, that they are inferior in furniture of their heads. Government of Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your fires an age ago,

Is lost, without the garniture of show. Gran.

As nature has poured out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very assiduous in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art. Addison's Spectator.

GARROUS. adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickle made of fish.

In a civet-cat an offensive odour proceeds,
partly from its food, that being especially fish;
whereof this humour may be a garrous excretion, and odious separation. Brown.

GARRAN. n. f. [Erse. It imports the same as gelding. The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby. A Highland horse, which, when brought into the north of England, takes the name of galloway.

When he comes forth, he will make tacit cows and garrans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons. Spenser.

Every man would be forced to provide winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garran shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrans would decrease. Temple.

GARRET. n. f. [garite, the tower of a citadel, French.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commission'd by the government,
Are seldom to an empty garret sent. Dezden.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

On earth the god of wealth was made
Sole patron of the building trade;
Leaving the arts the spacious air,
With licence to build castles there:

And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,
To lodge in garrets, comes from thence. Swift.

2. Rotten wood. Not in use.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by daylight, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret. Bacon.

GARRETER. n. f. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

GARRISON. n. f. [garrison, French.]

1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me,
Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garrison. Sidney.

2. Fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,
With a new chain of garrisons you bind. Waller.

3. The state of being placed in a fortification for its defence.

Some of them that are laid in garrison will do no great hurt to the enemies. Spenser on Ireland.

To GARRISON. v. a. [from the noun.]
To secure by fortresses.

Others those forces join,
Which garrison the conquests near the Rhine.
Dryden's Juvenal.

GARRULITY. n. f. [garrulitas, Lat.]

1. Loquacity; incontinence of tongue;
inability to keep a secret.

Let me here
Expiate, if possible, my crime,
Shameful garrulity. Milton's Agonistes.

2. The quality of talking too much;
talkativeness.

Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided:
first of all, loquacity or garrulity. Ray.

GARRULOUS. adj. [garrulus, Latin.]
Prattling; talkative.

Old age looks out,
And garrulous recounts the seats of youth. Thomson.

GARTER. n. f. [gardus, Welsh; jurtier, French; from gar, Welsh, the binding of the knee.]

1. A string or riband by which the stocking is held upon the leg.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit. Shakspeare's Taming of the Shrew.

When we rest in our cloaths we loosen our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage. Ray.

Handsome garters at your knees. Swift.

There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,
And all the trophies of his former loves. Pope.

2. The mark of the order of the garter,
the highest order of English knighthood.

Now by my george, my garter.
—The george, protestant's, hath but his holy honour;

The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue. Shakspeare's Richard III.

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race. Dryd.

3. The principal king at arms.

To GARTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a garter.

He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose. Shakspeare.

A person was wounded in the leg, below the gartering place. Wijeman's Surgeon.

GARTH. n. f. [as if girth, from gird.] The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.

GAS. n. f. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated; but he uses it loosely in many senses. Harri.

G A S

GASCONADE. n. f. [French; from Gascon, a nation eminent for boasting.] A boast; a bravado.

Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you? Swift.

To GASCOMADE. v. n. [from the noun.] To boast; to brag; to bluster.

To GASH. v. a. [from hacher, to cut, French. Skinner.] To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death. Hayward.

Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it; but to carve a beautiful image requires art. Tillotson.

See me gash'd with knives,
Or fear'd with burning steel. Rowe's Royal Conv.
Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,

He reel'd, he groun'd, and at the altar fell. A. Philips.

GASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A deep and wide wound.

He glancing on his helmet, made a large
And open gash therein; were not his target,
That broke the violence of his intent,
The weary soul from thence it would discharge. Spenser.

A perilous gash, a very limb lost off. Shaksp.
Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lists; but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground. Hayward.

But th' ethereal substance clos'd,
Not long divisible; and from the gash
A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd. Milton.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.

I was fond of back sword and cudgel play,
And now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar. Arbutnot.

GA'SKINS. n. f. [from Gaskigne. See GALLIGASKINS.] Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.

If one point break, the other will hold;
Or, if both break, your gaskins fall. Shakspere.

To GASP. v. n. [from gape, Skinner; from gispe, Danish, to sob, Junius.]

1. To open the mouth wide to catch breath with labour.

The sick for air before the portal gasp. Dryden.
They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;
But the weak voice deceiv'd their gasping throats. Dryden.

The gasping head flies off; a purple flood Flows from the trunk. Dryden's Æneid.
The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew no longer air, but fire. Dryden.

A panting of wit lay gasping for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish. Dryden.
The rich countrymen in Austria were faint and gasping for breath. Brown's Travels.

Pale and faint,
He gasps for breath; and, as his life flows from him,
Demands to see his friends. Addison's Cato.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.

I lay me down to gasp my latest breath;
The woives will get a breakfast by my death. Dryden.

He raggers round, his eyeballs roll in death,
And with short lobs he gasps away his breath. Dryden's Æneid.

G A T

3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as nature never expresses desire by gasping.

The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and gassed after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom. Spenser.

GASP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.

2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.

His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name
Is at last gasp. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;
And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick. Shakspere's Henry vi.

If in the dreadful hour of death,
If at the latest gasp of breath,
When the cold damp bedews your brow,
You hope for mercy, shew it now. Addison.

To GAST. v. a. [from gast, Saxon. See AGHAST.] To make aghast; to fright; to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.

When he saw my best alarmed spirits,
Sold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,

Or whether gasted by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled. Shaksp. K. Lear.

GA'STRICK. adj. [from gastre.] Belonging to the belly.

GASTROGRAPHY. n. f. [gastre and graphe.] In strictness of etymology signifies no more than sewing up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptance it implies, that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestine. Sharp's Surgery.

GASTROTOMY. n. f. [gastre and tomia.] The act of cutting open the belly.

GAT. The preterit of get.

Moses gat him up into the mount. Exodus.

GATE. n. f. [geat, Saxon.]

1. The door of a city, castle, palace, or large building.

Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul flies through these wounds to seek thee. Shakspere.

Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without Good-morrow to the sun. Shaksp. Cymb.

2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into enclosed grounds.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?
—Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shakspere.

3. An avenue; an opening.

Auria had done nothing but wisely and politically, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war. Knales' History.

GATEVEIN. n. f. The vena porta.

Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disperseth that blood. Bacon's Henry vii.

GATEWAY. n. f. [gate and way.] A way through gates of enclosed grounds.

Gateways between inclosures are so miry, that they cannot cart between one field and another. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GA'THER. v. a. [gabepan, Saxon.]

1. To collect; to bring into one place.
Gather stones—and they took stones and made an heap. Genesis.

2. To get in harvest.

G A T

The seventh year we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase. Leviticus.

His opinions
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Gather'd from all the famous colleges. Shakspere's Henry viii.

Cast up the highway, gather out the stones. Isaiah.

I will spend this preface upon those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer. Watson.

To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees. Locke.

4. To crop; to pluck.

What have I done?
To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No sooner gain'd, but slighted and betray'd;
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground! Dryden.

5. To assemble.

They have gathered themselves together against me. Job.

All the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon.

6. To heap up; to accumulate.

He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. Proverbs.

7. To select and take.

Save us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name. Psalms.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind. Matthew.

9. To collect charitable contributions.

10. To bring into one body or interest.
I will gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him. Isaiah.

11. To draw together from a state of diffusion; to compress; to contract.

Immortal Tully shone,
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne;
Gath'ring his flowing robe he seem'd to stand,
In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand. Pope.

12. To gain.

He gathers ground upon her in the chace;
Now breathes upon her hair with nearer pace. Dryden.

13. To pucker needlework.

14. To collect logically; to know by inference.

That which, out of the law of reason or of God, men probably gathering to be expedient, they make it law. Locke.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Shakspere.

After he had seen the vision, we endeavoured to get into Macedonia, gathering that the Lord had called us. Acts.

From this doctrine of the increasing and lessening of sin in this respect, we may gather, that all sins are not alike and equal, as the flocks of ancient times, and their followers, have falsely imagined. Parkins.

Return'd,
By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton.

Madamoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Sibyl, is translating Chaucer into French:—from which I gather that he has formerly been translated into the old Provençal. Dryden.

15. To GATHER Breath. [A proverbial expression.] To have respite from any calamity.

G A U

The luckless lucky made
A long time with that savage people fluid,
To gather breath, in many miseries. Spenser.

To GA'THER. v. n.

1. To be condensed; to thicken.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to hear. Dryden's Pastorals.

When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh my boys! he cries. Dryden.

When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, east, and west, on airy courses born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn. Dryden.

Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it. Addison's Cato.

2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.

Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came in to them. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. To assemble.

There be three things that mine heart feareth;
the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. Ecclesi.

4. To generate pus or matter.

Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Piety.

GA'THER. n. f. [from the verb.] Pucker;
cloth drawn together in wrinkles.

Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches and the gath'ers,
Part canons, periwigs, and feathers. Hudib.

GA'THERER. n. f. [from gather.]

1. One that gathers; one that collects; a collector.

I will spend this preface about those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other men's stuff. Watson's Preface to Elem. of Architecture.

2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.

I was a herdman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Amos.

Nor in that land
Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand. May's Virgil.

GA'THERING. n. f. [from gather.] Collection of charitable contributions.

Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gatherings when I come. 1 Corinthians.

GA'TTEN-TREE. n. f. A species of Cornelian cherry.

GAUDE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain: Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks à l'usage; and Mr. Lye finds gaude,
in Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gwaudio, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy;
a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure.
In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It also in Scotland denotes a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy.
It is not now much used.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gauds, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats. Shaksp.
The fun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,

G A V

Is all too wanton, and too full of gauds;
To give me audience. Shaksp. King Lear.

My love to Hermia

Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaud,

Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shaksp.
Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gauds the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbans finet holland bear. Dryden.

To GAUDE. v. a. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.

Go to a gossip's feast, and gaud with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shakspere.

GA'UDERY. n. f. [from gaude.] Finery;
ostentatious luxury of dress.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Bacon's Essays.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tawny'd gaud'ry known. Dryden.

GA'UDILY. adv. [from gaude.] Showily.

GA'UDINESS. n. f. [from gaudy.] Show-iness; tinsel appearance.

GA'UDY. adj. [from gaude.] Showy;
splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not express in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shaksp.
Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless
As the gay motes that people the sun-beams. Milton.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hop'd from side to side. Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.
A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

It is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity. Law.

GA'UDY. n. f. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast;
a festival; a day of plenty. A word used in the university.

He may surely be content with a fast to-day,
that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Cheyne.

GA'VE. The preterit of give.

Thou can't not every day give me thy heart;
If thou can't give it, then thou never gav'st it:
Lovers riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
It stays at home, and thou with losing sav'st it. Dunne.

GA'VEL. n. f. A provincial word for ground.

Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days. Mortimer.

GA'VELKIND. n. f. [In law.] A custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force in divers places of England, but especially in Kent. Corwell.

Among other Welsh customs he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind. Darvies on Ireland.

G A U

To GAUGE. v. a. [gauge, jaugé, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced, and often written, gagé.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.

2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vanes nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derham's Physico-Theology.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer, of taking measure or gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Pope.

GAUGE. n. f. [from the verb.] A measure,
a standard.

This plate must be a gag to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Mason.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gag of your trade and wealth. Locke.

Timothy proposed to his mistress, that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high; and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured. Arbuthnot's History of J. Bull.

GAUGER. n. f. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those earls and dukes have been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and escheator. Carew on Cornwall.

GAUNT. adj. [As if gwant, from gepanian, to lessen, Saxon.] Thin;
slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old;
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt;
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon
Is my strict fast; I mean my childrens looks;
And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt;
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones. Shakspere's Richard II.

Two maffists, gaunt and grim, her flight
pursu'd,
And oft their fatten'd fangs in blood embriu'd. Dryden's Fables.

GA'UNTLY. adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly;
slenderly; meagerly.

GA'UNTLET. n. f. [gantlet, French.]
An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the cestus, or boxing glove.

A scaly gantlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shaksp. Henry IV.

Feel but the difference, soft and rough;
This a gantlet, that a mull. Cleaveland.

Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend;
The strong with iron gantlets arm'd shall stand,
Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow sand. Dryd.
Who naked wrestled best, besmear'd with oil;
Or who with gantlets gave or took the foil. Dryden's Fables.

The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light;
View his two gantlets; these declare
That both his hands were us'd to war. Prior.
So to repel the Vandals of the stage,
Our vet'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;

He throws the gawtlet Orway us'd to wield,
And calls for Englishmen to judge the field.

Southern.

To GAZE. v. n. [γᾱζέω, or rather gezean, to see, Saxon.] To look intently and earnestly; to look with eagerness.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem,
Inch'd with all the honours of the world:
If so, gaze on.

Shakespeare's Henry iv.

From some the east her modest eyes below;
At some her gazing glances roving flew.

Fairf.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her.

Boetius.

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind.

Shakespeare.

High stations tumults, but not bliss create;
None think the great unhappy, but the great.

Fools gaze and envy: Envy darts a sting,
Which makes a swain as wretched as a king.

Yong.

To GAZE. v. a. To view steadfastly.
Strait toward heav'n my wond'ring eyes I turn'd,
And gaz'd a while the ample sky. Milton.

GAZE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Intent regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being lighten'd with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,

And lifted up above the world's gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise. Spenser.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
If any air of music touch their ears,

You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,

By the sweet power of music. Shakespeare.

Not a month
'Fore your queen dy'd, she was more worth such gazes

Than what you look on now. Shakespeare.

With secret gaze,
Or open admiration, him beheld,
On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd

Worlds. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Pindar is a dark writer, wants connexion as to our understanding, soars out of sight, and leave his readers at a gaze. Dryden.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription. Addison's Freeholder.

2. The object gazed on.

I must die
Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;

To gund in brazen fetters, under task,
With my heav'n-gifted strength. Milton.

GA'ZEL. n. f. An Arabian deer:

GAZER. n. f. [from gaze.] He that gazes; one that looks intently with eagerness or admiration.

In her cheeks the vermeil red did shew,
Like roses in a bed of lilies shed;

The which ambrosial odours from them threw,
And gazers' sense with double pleasure fed.

Fairy Queen.

I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk. Shaksf.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike;
And, like the sun, they shine on all alike. Pope.

His learned ideas give him a transcendent delight; and yet, at the same time, discover the blemishes which the common gazer never observed.

Warri's Logic.

GA'ZEFUL. adj. [gaze and full.] Looking intently.

The brightness of her beauty clear,
The ravish'd hearts of gaze'ful men might rear

To admiration of that heavenly light. Spenser.

GA'ZEHOUND. n. f. [gaze and hound; canis agasau, Skinner.] A hound that pursues not by the scent, but by the eye.

See'st thou the gazehound? how with glance severe

From the close herd he marks the destin'd deer!

Tickel.

GAZETTE. n. f. [gazetta is a Venetian halfpenny, the price of a newspaper, of which the first was published at Venice.] A paper of news; a paper of publick intelligence. It is accented differently on the first or last syllable.

And sometimes when the loss is small,
And danger great, they challenge all;

Print new additions to their seats,
And emendations in gazettes. Hudibras.

An English gentleman, without geography, cannot well understand a gazette. Locke.

One cannot hear a name mentioned in it that does not bring to mind a piece of the gazette.

Addison's Guardian.

All, all but truth, falls dead-born from the press;

Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.

GAZETTEER. n. f. [from gazette.]

1. A writer of news.

2. An officer appointed to publish news by authority, whom Steele calls the lowest minister of state.

1. Furniture; accoutrements; dress; habit; ornaments.

Array thyself in her most gorgeous gear.

Fairy Queen.

When he found her bound, stript from her gear,
And vile tormentors ready law in place,

He broke through. Fairfax.

When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magic dust,

I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear.

Milton.

I fancy every body observes me as I walk the street, and long to be in my old plain gear again.

Addison's Guardian.

To see some radiant nymph appear
In all her glittering birthday gear,

You think some goddess from the sky
Descended ready cut and dry. Swift.

2. The traces by which horses or oxen draw.

Apollo's spite Pallas discern'd, and flew to Ty-deus' son;

His scourge reach'd, and his horse made fresh;

then took her angry run
At king Eumelus, brake his gears. Chapman.

The frauds he learn'd in his frantick years
Made him uneasy in his lawful gears. Dryden.

But if the horal orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.
What's the meaning of all these trigrams and gimcracks? Jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbuthnot's John Bull.

GI'MLET. n. f. [gibelet, guimbelet, French.]

A borer with a screw at its point.

The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit. Masson.

GIMMAL. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner and Ainsworth to be derived from gimellus, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical. Any thing done by occult means is vulgarly said to be done by geometry.]

Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery. Hammer.
I think by some odd gimmals or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else they could not hold out so as they do. Shakspere's Henry vi.

GIMMER. n. f. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.

The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magic. Morley's Divine Dialogues.

GIMP. n. f. [See GIM. Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce.] A kind of silk twist or lace.

GIN. n. f. [from engine.]

1. A trap; a snare.

As the day begins,

With twenty gins we will the small birds take,
And pasture make. Sidney.

Which two, through treason and deceitful gin,
Hath slain Sir Mordant. Spenser.

So strives the woodcock with the gin;
So doth the coney struggle in the net. Shakspere.

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty. Shaksp.

If those, who have but sense, can shun
The engines that have them annoy'd;
Little for me had reason done,
If I could not thy gin avoid. Ben Jonson's Forest.

I know thy trains,
Though dearly to my cost; thy gins and toils
No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd. Milton.

He made a planetary gin,
Which rats would run their own heads in,
And come on purpose to be taken,
Without th' expense of cheese and bacon. Hudibras.

Keep from slaying scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from iron gin. Hudibras.

2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture.

Typhzus' joints were stretched on a gin. Spenser.

3. A pump worked by rotatory sails.

The dells would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adits or fountains to drain them, that no gins or machines would suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray.

A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water distilling on the outside of the gin pump of Mottyn coalpits. Woodward.

4. [contracted from GENEVA.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper-berries.

This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope.

Gin shops sower sighs return. Pope.

GINGER. n. f. [zinniber, Latin; gingero, Italian.]

The flower consists of five leaves, shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in the head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain seeds. Miller.

The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromack, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves. Hill's Materia Medica.

Or wafting ginger round the streets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow. Pope.

GINGERBREAD. n. f. [ginger and bread.]

A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some aromack seeds. It is sometimes gilt.

An' I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread. Shakspere.
Hercurrants there and gooseberries were spread,
With the enticing gold of gingerbread. King's Cookery.

'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames. Swift.

GINGERLY. adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously; nicely.

What is 't that you Took up so gingerly? Shakspere.

GINGERNESS. n. f. Niceness; tenderness. Diab.

GINGIVAL. adj. [gingiva, Latin.] Belonging to the gums.

Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlusal appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of per-viousness. Helder's Elements of Speech.

To GINGLE. v. n.

1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.

The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling halfpence sound. Gay.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And gingling down the backstairs, told the crew,
Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope.

2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.

To GINGLE. v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

GINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A shrill resounding noise.

2. Affection in the sound of periods.

GINGLYMOID. adj. [γινγλυμοειδής, a hinge, and μοειδής.] Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.

The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymoid joint. Walther.

GINGLYMUS. n. f. A mutual indenting of two bones into each others cavity, in the manner of a hinge, of which the elbow is an instance. Wiseman.

GINNET. n. f. [ginnet.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but, I believe, erroneously, a Spanish gennet, improperly written for ginnet.

GINSENG. n. f. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe, of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent. It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromatick, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China and America. The Chinese value this root at three times its weight in silver. Hill.

To GIR. v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.

GIPSY. n. f. [corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe, they declared, and perhaps, truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.]

1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.

The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour. Addison.

A frantick gipsy now, the house he haunts,
And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants. Prior.

In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmistry;

A figit in his hand the gipsy bears,
In th' other a prophetick sieve and sheers. Garth.
I, near yon stile, three fallow gypsies met;
Upon my hand they cast a poring look,
Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook. Gay.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Laura, to her lady, was but a kitchen-wench;
Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots. Shakspeare.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow play'd the gipsy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Estrange.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes:
The gipsy knows her pow'r, and flies. Prior.

GI'RSOLE. n. f. [girafol, French.]

1. The herb turnfol.

2. The opal stone.

To GIRD. v. a. pret. girded or girt. [xynban, Saxon.]

1. To bind round.

They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth. 2 Maccabees.

2. To put on so as to surround or bind.

Cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened to bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Swift.

3. To fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him. 1 Mac.
My bow and thunder, my almighty arms
Gird on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh. Milton.

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And, at the head of our remaining troops,
Attack the foe. Addison's Cato.

The combatant too late the field declines,
When now the sword is girded to his loins. Prior.

4. To invest.

Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;
And in reversion of that duty done,
I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

The son appear'd,
Girt with omnipotence. Milton's Par. Lost.

5. To dress; to habit; to clothe.

I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk. Ezekiel.

Typhonic there keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

6. To cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together
fow'd,
To gird their waist: vain covering, if it hide
Their guilt, and dreaded shame! Milton.

7. To furnish; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Milton.

8. To enclose; to encircle.

That Nyctean isle,
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham
Hid Amalthea, and her florid son
Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye. Milton.

9. To reproach; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the god. Shakspeare.

To GIRD. v. n. [Of this word in this sense I know not the original; it may be formed by a very customary transposition from gride or cut.] To break a scornful jest; to gibe; to sneer.

This wondrous error growth
At which our critics gird. Drayton.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me:
The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakspeare.

GIRD. n. f. [from the verb.] A twitch; a pang: it may come from the sensation caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly. This word is now seldom used, unless the former etymology be admitted.

Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird:
For shame, my lord of Winchester relent. Shakf.
Conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the atheists feel.

He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the checks and girds of it when he doth amiss. Goodman.

GI'RDER. n. f. [from gird.] In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joists are framed in at one arm to the girders. Harris.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder. Mason's Mech. Exer.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd. Black.

GIRDLE. n. f. [xynbe, Saxon.]

1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle,
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shaksp.
Many conceive there is somewhat amiss, until they put on their girdle. Brown.

On him his mantle, girdle, sword and bow,
On him his heart and soul he did bestow. Cowley.

2. Enclosure; circumference.

Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies. Shakspeare's Henry v.

3. The zodiack.

Great breezes in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, do refrigerate. Bac.

To GI'RDL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gird; to bind as with a girdle.

Lay the gentle babes, girdling one another Within their innocent alabaster arms. Shakspeare.

2. To enclose; to shut in; to environ.

Those sleeping stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about. Shakspeare.
Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That gird'st in those wolves! Shakspeare.

GI'RDLBELT. n. f. [girdle and belt.]

The belt that encircles the waist.
Nor did his eyes less longingly behold
The girdlebelt, with nails of burnish'd gold. Dryden.

GI'RDLER. n. f. [from girdle.] A maker of girdles.

GIRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.

GIRL. n. f. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Merie Casaubon, as is his custom, derives it from agen of the same signification; Minshaw from garrula, Latin, a prattler, or girella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from berlode, Welsh, from which, says he, barlot is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceopl for a man, might likewise have ceopla for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Hickes derives it most probably from the Islandick karlinna, a woman.] A young woman, or female child.

In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl. Shakspeare.

I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Shakf.
The foolish Amphimachus, to field brought gold to be his wracke,

Proude girl like, that doth ever beare her dower upon her backe. Chapman.

A weather-beaten lover, but once known,
Is sport for every girl to practise on. Darke.

Tragedy should blush as much to stoop
To the low mimic follies of a farce,
As a grave matron would to dance with girls. Reformation.

A boy, like thee, would make a kingly line;
But oh! a girl like her, must be divine! Dryden.

GI'Rlish. adj. [from girl.] Suited a girl; youthful.

In her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor. Carver.

GI'Rlishly. adv. [from girlish.] In a girlish manner.

To GIEN. v. n. It seems to be a corruption of grin. It is still used in Scotland, and is applied to a crabbed, captious, or peevish person.

GI'RROCK. n. f. [acus major.] A kind of fish. Diä.

GIRT. The part. pass. of gird.

To GIRT. v. a. [from gird.] To gird; to encompass; to encircle. Not proper.

In the dread ocean, undulating wide
Beneath the radiant line that girts the globe. Thomson.

GIRT. } n. f. [from gird.]

GIRTH. }
1. A band by which the saddle or burden is fixed upon the horse.

Here lies old Hobson, death hath broke his girth;
And here, alas! hath laid him in the dirt. Milton.

- Or the saddle turn'd round, or the girth brake;
For low on the ground, woe for his sake,
The law is found Ben Jonson
Nor Pegasus could bear the load,
Along the high celestial road;
The steed opac'd would break his girth,
To raise the lumber from the earth. Swift
Mordant gallops on alone;
The roads are with his foil'ers thrown;
This breaks a girth and that a bone. Swift
2. A circular bandage.
The most common way of bandage is by that of the girth, which girth hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends are tacked firmly together. Wife's Surgery
3. The compass measured by the girdle, or enclosing bandage.
He's a lassy jolly fellow that lives well, at least three yards in the girth. Addison's Freeholder
- To GIRTH. v. a. To bind with a girth.
To GISE Ground. v. a. Is when the owner of it does not feed it with his own flock, but takes in other cattle to graze. Bailey
- GIRTS. Among the English Saxons, signifies a pledge: thus, Fredgiste is a pledge of peace; Gisbert an illustrious pledge, like the Greek Homerus. Gibbs Camden
- GITH. n. f. [nigilla.] An herb called Guinea pepper.
- To GIVE. v. a. preter. gave; part. pass.
given. [gipan, Saxon.]
1. To bestow; to confer without any price or reward; not to sell.
I had a master that gave me all I could ask,
but thought fit to take one thing from me again. Temple Constant at church and change; his gains were sure,
His giving rare, save farthings to the poor. Pope
While tradesmen starve these Philomels are gay;
For generous lords had rather give than pay. Young
Half useless doom'd to live,
Pray's and advice are all I have to give. Harte
2. To transmit from himself to another by hand, speech, or writing; to deliver.
The woman whom thou gavest to be with me,
she gave me of the tree, and I did eat. Genesis They were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage. Matthew Those bills were printed not only every week, but also a general account of the whole year was given in upon the Thursday before Christmas.
Grant's Bells of Mortality
We shall give an account of these phenomena. Barnet
Aristotle advises not poets to put things evidently false and impossible into their poems, nor gives them licence to run out into wildness. Brown
3. To put into one's possession; to consign; to impart; to communicate.
Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out. Matthew Nature gives us many children and friends, to take them away; but takes none away to give them us again. Temple
Give me, says Archimedes, where to stand firm, and I will remove the earth. Temple
If the agreement of men had gave a scope into any one's hands, or put a crown on his head, that almost must direct its conveyance. Locke
4. To pay as a price or reward, or in exchange.
All that a man hath will he give for his life. Job
If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
VOL. I.

- And how unwillingly I left the rings,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure. Shakespeare
He would give his nuts for a piece of metal, and exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble. Locke
5. To yield; not to withhold.
Philip, Alexander's father, gave sentence against a prisoner at a time he was drowsy, and seemed to give small attention. The prisoner, after sentence was pronounced, said, I appeal:
the king, somewhat stirred, said, To whom do you appeal? The prisoner answered, from Philip, when he gave no ear, to Philip, when he shall give ear. Bacon's Apophthegms Constantia accused herself for having so tamely given an ear to the proposal. Addison
6. To quit; to yield as due.
Give place, thou stranger, to an honourable man. Eschus
7. To confer; to impart.
I will bless her, and give thee a son also of her. Genesis Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Bramb. against Hobbes
What beauties I lose in some places, I give to others which had them not originally. Dryden
8. To expose; to yield without retention.
All clad in skins of beasts the jav'lin bear:
Gave to the wanton winds their flowing hair. Dryden's Æneid 9. To grant; to allow.
'Tis given me once again to behold my friend. Rowe
He has not given Luther fairer play. Atterb.
10. To yield; not to deny.
I gave his wife proposal way;
Nay, urg'd him to go on: the shallow fraud
Will run him. Rowe's Ambitious Stepmother
11. To afford; to supply.
This opinion abated the fear of death in them which were so resolved, and gave them courage to all adventures. Hooker Give us also sacrifices and burnt-offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the Lord. Exodus 12. To empower; to commission.
Prepare
The due libation and the solemn pray'r;
Then give thy friend to shed the sacred wine. Pope's Odyssey
13. To enable.
God himself requireth the lifting up of pure hands in prayers; and hath given the world to understand, that the wicked, although they cry, shall not be heard. Hooker
Give me to know
How this foul rout began, who set it on. Shaksp.
So some weak shout, which else would poorly rise,
Jove's tree adopts, and lifts into the skies;
Through the new pupil soft'ning juices flow, Thrust forth the gems, and give the show'rs to blow. Ticket
14. To pay.
The applause and approbation I give to both your speeches. Shakespeare
15. To utter; to vent; to pronounce.
So you must be the first that gives this sentence,
And he that suffers. Shakespeare
The Rhodians seeing their enemies turn their backs, gave a great shout in derision of them. Knight's History
Let the first honest discoverer give the word about, than Wood's halfpence have been offered, and caution the poor people not to receive them. Swift 16. To exhibit; to show.
This instance gives the impossibility of an eternal existence in any thing essentially alterable or corruptible. Hale
17. To exhibit as the product of a ca'salation.

- The number of men being divided by the number of ships, gives four hundred and twenty-four men a-piece. Arbutnot
18. To do any act of which the consequence reaches others.
As we desire to give no offence ourselves, so neither shall we take any at the difference of judgment in others. Barnet
19. To exhibit; to send forth as odours from any body.
In oranges the ripping of the rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon
20. To addit; to apply.
The Helots, of the other side, shutting their gates, gave themselves to bury their dead, to cure their wounds, and rest their wearied bodies. Sidney After man began to grow to number, the first thing we read they gave themselves into, was the tilling of the earth and the seeding of cattle. Hooker
Groves and hill-altars were dangerous, in regard of the secret access which people, superstitiously given, might have always thereunto with ease. Hooker
The duke is virtuous, mild, and, too well given,
To dream on evil, or to work my downfall. Shakespeare
Fear him not, Cæsar, he's not dangerous;
He is a noble Roman, and well given. Shaksp.
His name is Falstaff: if that man should be jewelly given, he deceives me; for Harry, I see virtue in his looks. Shakespeare Hunades, the scourge of the Turks, was dead long before; so was also Mathias: after whom succeeded others, given all to pleasure and ease. Knight's History Though he was given to pleasure, yet he was likewise desirous of glory. Bacon's Henry viii.
He that giveth his mind to the law of the Most High, will seek out the wisdom of all the ancients. Ecclesiasticus
He is much given to contemplation, and the viewing of this theatre of the world. More They who gave themselves to warlike action and enterprises, went immediately to the palace of Odin. Temple
Men are given to this licentious humour of scoffing at personal blemishes and defects. L'Estrange Besides, he is too much given to horseplay in his raillery; and comes to battle, like a dictator from the plough. Dryden
I have some business of importance with her;
but her husband is so horribly given to be jealous. Dryden's Spanish Fryar
What can I refuse to a man so charitably given? Dryden
21. To resign; to yield up.
Finding ourselves in the midst of the greatest wilderness of waters, without victual, we gave ourselves for lost men, and prepared for death. Bacon's New Atlantis
Who say, I care not, those I give for lost;
And to instruct them will not quit the coast. Herbert
Virtue given for lost,
Deprest and overthrown, as seem'd;
Like that self-begotten bird
From out her ashly womb now teem'd. Milton
Since no deep within her gulph can hold Immortal vigour, though oppress'd and fall'n,
I give not Heav'n for lost. Milton's Par. Lost
For a man to give his name to christianity in those days, was to lift himself a martyr. Swath Ours gives himself for gone; you've watch'd your time,
He fights this day unarm'd, without his rhyme. Dryden
The parents, after a long search for the body, gave him for drowned in one of the canals. Addison's Spectator
As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back, inasmuch that the people gave him for gone. Addison's Guardian.

22. To conclude; to suppose.

Whence came you here, O friend, and whither bound?

All gave you lost on fair Cyclopean ground.

Garth's Ovid.

23. To GIVE away. To alienate from one's self; to make over to another; to transfer.

The more he got, the more he shewed that he gave away to his new mistress, when he betrayed his promises to the former. Sidney.

If you shall marry,
You give away this hand, and that is mine;
You give away heav'n's vows, and those are mine;

You give away myself, which is known mine.

Shakespeare.

Honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife.

Shakespeare.

I know not how they sold themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee. Shakespeare.

Love gives away all things, that so he may advance the interest of the beloved person. Taylor.

But we who give our native rights away,
And our enslav'd posterity betray,
Are now reduc'd to beg an alms and go
On holidays to see a puppet-show. Dryden's Juv.

Alas, said I, man was made in vain! How is he given away to misery and mortality! Addison.
Theodosius made a private vow never to inquire after Constantia, whom he looked upon as given away to his rival, upon the day on which their marriage was to have been solemnized.

Addison.

Whatsoever we employ in charitable uses, during our lives, is given away from ourselves: what we bequeath at our death, is given from others only, as our nearest relations. Atterbury.

24. To GIVE back. To return; to restore.

Their vices perhaps give back all those advantages which their victories procured. Atterbury.

25. To GIVE forth. To publish; to tell.

Soon after it was given forth, and believed by many, that the king was dead. Hayward.

26. To GIVE the hand. To yield pre-eminence, as being subordinate or inferior.

Lessons being free from some inconveniences, whereunto sermons are more subject, they may in this respect no less take than in others: they must give the hand, which betokeneth pre-eminence. Hooker.

27. To GIVE over. To leave; to quit; to cease.

Let novelty therefore in this give over endless contradictions, and let ancient customs prevail. Hooker.

It may be done rather than that be given over.

Hooker.

Never give her over;

For scorn at first makes after love the more.

Shakespeare.

If Desdemona will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful solicitations. Shakespeare's Othello.

All the soldiers, from the highest to the lowest, had solemnly sworn to defend the city, and not to give it over unto the last man. Kneller's History.

Those troops which were levied, have given over the prosecution of the war. Clarendon.

But worth of all to give her over,
'Till th'as desperate to recover. Hamlet.

A woman had a hen that laid every day and she fancied that upon a larger allowance this hen might lay twice a day; but the hen grew fat, and gave quite over laying. L'Estrange.

Many have given over their pursuits after fame, either from the disappointments they have met, or from their experience of the little pleasure which attends it. Addison's Spectator.

28. To GIVE over. To add; to attach to.

Zelma, govern and direct me; for I am wholly given over unto thee. Sidney.

When the Babylonians had given themselves over to all manner of vice, it was time for the Lord, who had set up that empire, to pull it down. Grew's Cosmology.

I used one thing ill, or gave myself so much over to it as to neglect what I owed either to God or the world. Templ.

29. To GIVE over. To conclude lost.

Since it is lawful to practise upon men that are forsaken and given over, I will adventure to prescribe to you. Suckling.

'Tis not amiss, e'er y' are giv'n o'er,
To try one desprate medicine more;
And where your case can be no worse,
The desprate'st is the wisest course. Hamlet.

The abbess, finding that the physicians had given her over, told her that Theodosius was just gone before her, and had sent her his benediction. Addison's Spectator.

Her condition was now quite desperate, all regular physicians, and her nearest relations, having given her over. Arbutnot.

Yet this false comfort never gives him o'er,
That whilst he creeps, his vigorous thoughts can soar. Pope.

Not one foretells I shall recover;
But all agree to give me over. Swift.

30. To GIVE over. To abandon.

The duty of uniformity throughout all churches, in all manner of indifferent ceremonies, will be very hard, and therefore best to give it over. Hooker.

Abdemelech, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became a monk. Kneller.

Sleep hath forsok, and giv'n me o'er
To death's benumbing opium, as my only cure. Milton.

The cause for which we fought and swore
So boldly, shall we now give o'er? Hamlet.

31. To GIVE out. To proclaim; to publish; to utter.

The fathers give it out for a rule, that whatsoever Christ is said in Scripture to have received, the same we ought to apply only to the manhood of Christ. Hooker.

It is given out, that, sleeping in my orchard,
A serpent stung me. So the whole ear of Denmark
Is, by a forged process of my death, Rankly abused. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

One that gives out himself prince Florisel,
Son of Polixenes, with his princely. Shakespeare.

It hath been given out, by an hypocritical traitor, who was the first master of my ship, that I earned with me out of England twenty-two thousand pieces of twenty-two shillings per piece.

The charge was given with so well governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots' battalion was enforced to give in. Hayward.

5. To GIVE in. [A French phrase.] To adopt; to embrace.

This is a geography particular to the medalists; the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it, and furnish us with very good lights for the explication of it. Addison on Medals.

This consideration may induce a translator to give in to those general phrases, which have attained a veneration in our language from being used in the Old Testament. Pope.

The whole body of the people are either stupidly negligent, or else giving in with all their might to those very practices that are working their destruction. Swift.

6. To GIVE off. To cease; to forbear.

The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we give off as soon as we perceived that it reaches the mind. Locke.

7. To GIVE over. To cease; to act no more.

If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can shew we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church polity. Hosker.

Neither hath Christ, thro' union of both natures, incurred the damage of either; lest, by being born a man, we should think he hath given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also. Hosker.

Give not o'er so; to him again; intreat him;
Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown,
You are too cold. Shakspeare's Measure.

The state of human actions is so variable, that to try things oft and never to give over, doth wonders. Bacon's Natural History.

Demetrius, king of Macedon, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king. Bacon.

So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse Met ever, and to shameful silence brought,
Yet gives not o'er, though desperate of success. Milton.

Shall we kindle all this flame
Only to put it out again?

And must we now give o'er,

And only end where we begun?

In vain this mischief we have done,

If we can do no more. Denham.

It would be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to desist from any farther pursuits after fame. Addison.

He came again, and was forced to give over for the same reason. Swift.

8. To GIVE out. To publish; to proclaim.

Simon bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one. Acts.

9. To GIVE out. To cease; to yield.

We are the earth; and they,

Like moles within us, heave and cast about:

And 'till they foot and clutch their prey;

They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

Madam, I always believ'd you so stout,
That for twenty denials you would not give out. Swift.

GIVER. n. f. [from give.] One that gives; donor; bestower; distributor; granter.

Well we may afford

Our gives their own gifts. Milton's Par. Lost.

By thee how fairly is the giver now

Repaid? But gratitude in thee is lost

Long since. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

I have not liv'd since I heard the news;

The gift the guilty giver doth accuse. Dryden.

Both gifts destructive to the givers prove;

Alike both lovers fall by those they love. Pope.

GIVES. n. f. Fetters or shackles for the feet.

GIZZARD. n. f. [gesser, French; gigeria, Latin.] It is sometimes called gizzern.

1. The strong musculous stomach of a fowl.

Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the gizzern. Mor.

In birds there is no mastication in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of antestomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glandules distilling in there, and thence transferred into the gizzard, or musculous stomach. Roy on the Creation.

Their nestle near the throne,

By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially used for apprehension or conception of mind: as, he frets his gizzard, he harasses his imagination.

But that which does them greatest harm,
Their spiritual gizzards are too warm;
Which puts the overheated fets

In fevers still. Hudibras.

Satisfaction and restitution lie so curiously hard upon the gizzards of our publicans, that their blood is not half so dear to them as the treasure in their coffers. L'Estrange.

gladdens her, when she does not attend to it. Addison's Spectator.
GLA'DDER. n. f. [from glad.] One that makes glad; one that gladdens; one that exhilarates.
Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron,
Have pity, goddess. Dryden.
GLADE. n. f. [from glöpan, to be hot,
or to shine; whence the Danish glöd, and the obsolete English gleed, a red-hot coal.] A lawn or opening in a wood.
Lucus. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.
So flam'd his eyes with rage and rancorous
ire;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade. Spenser.
Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade
The lion sleeping, lay in secret shade. Hub. Tale.
O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening. Milton's Paradise Lost.
When any, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star
Shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy. Milton.
For noonday's heat are closer arbours made,
And for fresh evening air the open glade. Dryden's Innocence.
There interspers'd in lawns and open glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades. Pope.
By the heroes armed shades
Glint'ring through the gloomy glades;
By the youths that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
Oh! take the husband or restore the wife! Pope.
She smil'd, array'd
With all the charms of sun-shine, stream and glade,
New dress'd and blooming as a bridal maid. Harte.

His off'ring soon propitious fire from heav'n Consum'd with nimble glances, and grateful
steam:
The other's not; for his was not sincere. Milton.
2. A stroke or dart of the beam of light.
The aspects which procure love are not gazings,
but sudden glances and dartings of the eye. Bacon.
There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment; some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, and a look of gravity. Dryden.
Boldly she look'd, like one of high degree;
Yet never seem'd to cast a glance on me;
At which I only joy'd, for truth to say,
I felt an unknown awe, and some dismay. Harte.
3. A snatch of light; a quick view.
The ample mind takes a survey of several objects with one glance. Watts on the Mind.
To GLANCE. v. n. [from the noun.]

ing chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Hakewill on Providence.
GLAND. n. f. [glans, Latin; gland, French.] The glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.
The abscess began deep in the body of the glands. Wise man.
The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twist'd with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Blackmore.
GLANDERS. n. f. [from gland.] In a horse is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green, or black. Farrar's Diä.

Were my wife's liver Infested as her life, she would not live The running of one glass. Shakspere.

5. The destined time of man's life.

No more his royal self did live, no more his noble fons, The golden Meleager now, their *glass*s all were run. Chapman.

6. A cup of glass used to drink in.

To this last costly treaty, That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass Did break 't' the rinsing. *Shaksp. Henry VIII.*When thy heart Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul Prompts to pursue the sparkling glass, be sure 'Tis time to shun it. Philips.

7. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; a draught.

While a man thinks one glass more will not make him drunk, that one glass hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. *Taylor.*The first glass may pass for health, the second for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

8. A perspective glass

The moon whose orb Through optick glass the Tuscan artist views. *Milton.*Like those who survey the moon by glasses, I tell of a shining world above, but not relate the glories of the place. *Dryden.GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.Get thee glass eyes: And, like a scurvy politician, seem To see the things thou dost not. Shakspere.
Glass bottles are more fit for this second lining than those of wood. *Mortimer's Husbandry.To GLASS. v. a.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent as in a glass or mirror. Not in use.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion, And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney.

2. To case in glass.

Methought all his senses were locked in his eye, As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy; Who tending their own worth, from whence they were glaz'd, Did point out to buy them, along as you pass. Shakspere.

To cover with glass; to glaze.

I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glaz'd over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. *Boyle.GLASSFURNACE. n. f. [glass and furnace.] A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. *Locke.GLASSGAZING. adj. [glass and gazing.] Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirror.A whorlton, glassgazing, finical rogue. *Shakspere.GLASSGRINDER. n. f. [glass and grinder.] One whose trade is to polish and grind glass.The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. *Boyle.GLASSHOUSE. n. f. [glass and house.] A house where glass is manufactured.I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouses. *Addison.GLASSMAN. n. f. [glass and man.] One who sells glass.The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman. *Swift.GLASSMETAL. n. f. [glass and metal.] Glass in fusion.Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. *Karon.GLASSWORK. n. f. [glass and work.] Manufacture of glass.The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glassworks. *Bacon.GLASSWORT. n. f. [salicornia, or saltwort.] A plant:It hath an epetulous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves; these embryos afterward become pods or bladder's, which, for the most part, contain one seed. The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the plants up toward the latter end of summer; and having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, by the chymists. *Müller.*For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. *Brown's Vulg. Err.GLASSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man! Drest in a little brief authority, Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd: His glassy essence, like an angry ape, Plays such fantastic tricks before high heav'n, As makes the angels weep. *Shakspere.*There is a willow grows aslant a brook, That shows his hoary leaves in the glassy stream. Shakspere.

GLE

The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing dust.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred
The hoary frosts that fall on winter's head?

Sandy.
The glassy deep. Dryden's Æneid.

This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in winter, and flowers again in spring.

GLAUCOMA. n. f. [γλαυκωμα; glaucoma, French.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a grayish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion.

Quincy.
The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract.

GLAIVE. n. f. [glaiue, French; glais, a hook, Welsh.] A broad sword; a falchion.

Two hundred Greeks came next in fight well try'd,
Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,
But each a glaiue hath pendant by his side.

Fairfax.
When zeal, with aged clubs and glaiues,
Gave chase to rockets and white flaves. Hudib.

TO GLAVER. v. n. [glawe, Welsh, flattery; ghpan, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheedle. A low word.

Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glavering council is as dangerous as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician.

TO GLAZE. v. a. [To glafs, only accidentally varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.
Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hang'd, and glazed with crystalline glass.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware. [from the French glaise, argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with brining tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it found reason that carries the stroke home.

White, with other strong colours with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it.

GLAZIER. n. f. [corrupted from glazier, or glaffier, of glass.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into rabbits the several panes of glasswork are set and fastened by the glazier.

And glingling fashes on the penthouse fount.

Gay's Trivia
And then, without the aid of neighbour's art,
Perform'd the carpenter's and glazier's part.

GLEAM. n. f. [gelioma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;
And conquerors hedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Ausonian stream.

GLE

At last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast.

Dryden's Aurangzebe.
We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the held with gleams of fire.

Addison's Cato
In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green.

Pope.
Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams
Fires that glow.

TO GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden coruscation.
Observant of approaching day,
The meek-ey'd morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled east.

2. To shine.
On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vistas through the trees.

GLEAMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flashing; darting sudden coruscations of light.

In brazen arms, that call a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warrior bends his way.

TO GLEAN. v. a. [glaner, French, as Skinner thinks, from granum, Latin.]

1. To gather what the reapers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers.

Cheap conquest for his following friend remain'd;
He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd.

Dryden.
The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself. Nelson.
She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palammon's fields.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.
That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his resplendent arms bath'd through the shady plain,

Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear;
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear
Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear.

Dryden's Æneid.
In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together.

GLEAM. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleam of yellow tyme distend his thighs:
He spoils the saffron.

GLEANER. n. f. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.
For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,

GLE

Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant flathead.

GLEANING. n. f. [from glean.] The act of gleaning, or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest.

GLEBE. n. f. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

This, like the moory plots, delights in sedgey bowers;
The grassy garlands loves, and oft attir'd with flowers

Of rank and mellow glebe.
Fertile of corn the glebe of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills.

Drayton.
Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will answer to the Sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.

Dryden.
Sleeping vegetables lie,
Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to-day.

2. The land possessed as a part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tythe, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe.

GLEBOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy. Swift.

GLEBY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flattery! thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand
Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year.

GLEDE. n. f. [gledagilde, Saxon.] A kind of hawk.

Ye shall not eat the gled, the kite, and the vulture.

GLEE. n. f. [gligge, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gaiety. It anciently signified musick played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
Whom all the people follow with great glee.

Fairy Queen.
Many wayfarers make themselves glee by veiling the inhabitants; who again furnish not to baigne them with perfume.

Carver.
Is Blouzelinda dead? Farewel my glee!
No happiness is now reserv'd for me.
The poor man then was rich, and liv'd with glee;
Each barley-head untaxt, and day-light free.

Harte.

GLEED. n. f. [from glopan, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLEEFUL. adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful. Not used.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boat?

Shakespeare.

GLEEK. n. f. [gligge, Saxon.] Mulick; or musician.

What wilt thou give us?—No money, but the gleek: I will give you the minstrel.

Shakespeare.

To GLEEK. v. a. [gligman, in Saxon, is a mimick or a droll.]

1. To lacer; to gibe; to droll upon.

I can gleek upon occasion

Shakespeare.

I have seen you gleeking or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.

Shakespeare.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimickry or drollery.

To GREEN. v. n. To shine with heat or polish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam. I have not remarked it in any other place.

Those who labour

The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleaming armour,
Acknowledge Vulcan's aid

Prior.

GLEET. n. f. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from glidan, Saxon, to run foistly.] A fanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

A hard dry elchar, without either matter or gleet.

Wifeman's Surgery.

To GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin fanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops.

Wifeman.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours raised by the sun make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, 'till they hit against the mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow, afford them a basin.

Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

GLEETY. adj. [from gleet.] Ichorous; thin; fanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gleety, you may suspect it corrupting.

Wifeman.

GLENN. n. f. [gleann, Erse.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is flart,
And woe the widow's daughter of the glenn.

Spenser.

GLEW. n. f. [gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

GLIB. adj. [from glid. Skinner.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them.

Burnet's Theory.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope compactly twisted together, with a noose that slip as glib as a birdcatcher's gin.

Arbutnot.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that glib and oily art

To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,

I'll do't before I speak. Shakespeare's King Lear.

There was never to much glib nonfence put together in well founding English.

Locke.

Now Curl his shop from rubbish drain;
Three genuine toms of Swift's remains;
And then, to make them pass the glibber,
Revis'd by Tibbald, More, and Cibber.

Swift.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man;
Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran.

Swift.

GLIB. n. f.

The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glibes, which is a thick curled both at hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disfiguring them.

Spenser on Ireland.

To GLIB. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'd geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations; they are conceits,
And I had rather glib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

Shakespeare.

GLIBLY. adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachus as well as conscience recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction

Government of the Tongue.

GLIBNESS. n. f. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enfold

The rock.

Chapman's Odyssey.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not to much as the flexure of a joint, and by accents of humour acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving.

Government of the Tongue.

To GLIDE. v. n. [glidan, Saxon; gliden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By each, among the dusky valleys glide

The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood.

Fairfax.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,
In double streams the briny waters glide.

Dryd.

Just before the confines of the wood,
The gliding Lethe leads her silent flood.

Dryd.

Where stay the Muses, in what lawn or grove?
In those fair fields where sacred lits glides,

Or else where Cam his winding vales divides.

Pope.

2. To pass on without change of step.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate

The myttick wonders of your silent state.

Dryden's Æneid.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

If one of mean affairs

May plod it in a week, why may not I

Glide thither in a day?

Shakespeare's Cymb.

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,
Glide under the green wave.

Milton.

He trembl'd every limb, and felt a snail

As if cold steel had glided through his heart.

Dryden's Fables.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear.

Dryden.

GLIDE. n. f. [from the verb.] Lapfe; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,

Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd

The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,

Seeing Orlando, it unlinked itself,

And with indented glides did slip away

Into a bush.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

GLIDER. n. f. [from glide.] One that glides.

The glance into my heart did glide;

Hey ho the glider;

Therewith my soul was sharply gride,

Such wounds soon waxen wider.

Spenser.

GLIKE. n. f. [glitz, Saxon. See GLEEK.]

A sneer; a scowl; a frown. Not now in use.

Where's the bastard's-braves, and Charles his glikes.

Shakespeare.

GLIMMER. v. n. [glimmer, Danish, to shine; glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. To shine faintly.

The west yet glimmers with some breaks of day.

Shakespeare.

The truth appears so naked on my side,

That any purblind eye may find it out.

—And on my side it is so well apparel'd,

So clear, so shining, and so evident;

That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Shakespeare.

For there no twilight of the sun's dull ray

Glimmers upon the pure and native day

Oft in glimmering bowers and glades

He met her.

Milton.

See'st thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,

The seat of desolation, void of light,

Save what the glimmering of these livid flames

Casts pale and dreadful?

Milton's Par. Lost.

The sacred influence

Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n

Shoots far into the bottom of dim night

A glimmering dawn.

Milton's Par. Lost.

Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,

Some seeds of light at length began to roll;

The rising motion of an infant ray,

Shot glimmering through the cloud, and promis'd day.

Prior.

Off by the winds, extinct the signal lies;

Or smother'd in the glimmering locker dies.

Gay's Trivia.

When rosy morning glimmer'd o'er the dales,

He drove to pasture all the lusty males.

Pope.

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.

On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were.

Watson.

The pagan priesthood was always in the druids;
and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted.

Swift.

GLIMMER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Faint splendour; weak light.

2. A kind of fossil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer.

Woodward on Fossils.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastic: talc, catfisher, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black.

Woodward.

GLIMPSE. n. f. [glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. A weak faint light.

Such vast room in nature;
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute

Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far Down to this habitable, which returns

Light back to them

Milton.

Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our short-figured reason having got some faint glimpse of,
we, in the dark, grope after.

Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.

Light as the lightning glimpse they ran?

Milton.

My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires,

My manhood, long misled by wand'ring fires, Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,

My pride struck out new sparkles of her own.

Dryden.

3. Transitory lustre.

There no clear glimpse of the sun's lovely face
Strikes through the solid darkness of the plane.

Quincy.

If I, celestial fire, in aught
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryden.

4. Short fleeting enjoyment.

If, while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
It haply be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great fire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

5. A short transitory view.

O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade. Milton.
Some God punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might have a tale or glimpse of his present justice. Hakewill.

A man used to such sort of reflections, sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden.

6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.

No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of. Shakespeare.

To GLIS'TEN. v. n. [glittan, German.]

To shine; to sparkle with light.

The beaming kind
Eye the black heaven, and next the glistering earth, Thomson.

With looks of dumb despair. Thomson.

The ladies eyes glistered with pleasure. Richardson's Pamela.

To GLISTER. v. n. [glittan, German; glisteren, Dutch.]

To shine; to be bright.

The wars flame most in summer, and the helments glister brightest in the fairest sunshine. Spenser on Ireland.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakespeare.

The golden sun
Gallops the zodiac in his glistering coach. Shakspeare.

All that glister is of gold. Shakspeare.

You were more than eye and talk
Of the court to-day, than all Else that glister'd in Whitehall. Ben Jonson.

When the sun shone upon the shields of gold and brass the mountains glistered therewith, and shined like lamps of fire. Maccabees.

It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant redish colour, and glistered prettily. Boyle.

GLISTER. n. f. [properly written clyster, from κλυστρον.] See CLYSTER. It is written wrong even by Brown.

Now enters Bulch with new state airs,
His lordship's premier minister;
And who, in all profound affairs,
Is held as needful as his glister. Swift.

Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion wherby nature excludeth another; which descending daily unto the bowels, excites those parts, and excites them unto expulsion. Brown.

To GLITTER. v. n. [glitman, Saxon.]

1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.

Steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

Before the battle joins, from afar
The field yet glitters with the pomp of war. Dryden's Virgil.

Scarce had'st thou time to unsheath thy con-
qu'ring blade;
It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Granville.

2. To be specious; to be striking.

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it. Decay of Piety.

In glittering scenes, o'er her own heart severe;
In crowds collected; and in courts sincere. Young.

GLITTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Lustre; bright show; splendour.

With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton.

Flourish not too much upon the glitter of fortune, for fear there should be too much alloy in
it. Coates on Pride.

Take away this measure from our dress and habits, and all is turned into such paint and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Law.

GLITTERAND. Shining; sparkling. A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termi- nation is still retained in Scotland.

GLITTERINGLY. adv. [from glitter.]

With shining lustre.

The youth, whose fortune the vast globe obey'd,
Finding his royal enemy betray'd,
Wept at his fall. Stepney.

Where God declares his intention to give dominion, he meant that he would make a species of creatures that should have dominion over the other species of this terrestrial globe. Locke.

3. A sphere in which the various regions of the earth are geographically de- picted, or in which the constellations are laid down according to their places in the sky.

The astrologer who spells the stars,
Mistakes his globe, and in her brighter eye
Interprets heaven's physiognomy. Chapman.

These are the stars,
But raise thy thought from sense, nor think to find Such figures as are in globes design'd. Cress.

4. A body of soldiers drawn into a circle.

Him round
A globe of fiery seraphim inclos'd,
With bright emblazoning, and horient arms. Milton.

A plant. Miller.

GLOBOSE. adj. [globosus, Latin.] Sphe- rical; round.

Regions, to which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more Than what this garden is to all the earth,
And all the sea; from one entire globe
Stretch'd into longitude. Milton's Par. Lost.

Then form'd the moon
Globose, and ev'ry magnitude of stars. Milton.

GLOBOSITY. n. f. [from globosus.] Sphe- ricity; sphericity.

Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably, 'till at last it appear not at all; no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth. Ray on the Creation.

GLOBOUS. adj. [globosus, Latin.] When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globose, when on the first globous: I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected.]

Spherical; round.

Wide over all the plain, and wider far
Than all this globe's earth in plain outspread;
Such are the courts of God! Milton.

The blazing instruments of death discharge
Horrible flames, and turpid streaming clouds;
Large globous irons fly, or dreadful hits, Singeing the air. Philips.

GLOBULAR. adj. [globulus, Lat.] Hav- ing the form of a small sphere; round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity.

Crew's Cosmologia Sacra.

GLOBULARIA. n. f. [Latin; globu- laire, French.] A flocculous flower.

Miller.

GLOBULE. n. f. [globule, French; globulus, Latin.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure; as the red particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope.

These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver.

Quincy.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the halo.

Newton's Opticks.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastic, and will break; the vessels which admit the smallest globule, cannot admit the greater without a rupture. Arbuthnot on Aliment.

GLOBULOUS. adj. [from globule.] In form of a small sphere; round.

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth. Boyle.

To GLOMERATE. v. a. [glomerare, Latin.]

of thread.

GLOOM. n. f. [glomang, Saxon, twilight.]

1. Imperfect darkness; dismalness; obscurity; defect of light.

Glowing embers through the room,

Teach light to counterfeit a gloom.

Milton.

This the feat,

That we must change for heav'n? This mournful gloom,

For that celestial light? Milton's Paradise Lost.

The still night, not now, as ere men fell,
Wholesome, and cool, and mild; but with black as

Accompany'd; with damps, and dreadful gloom.

Milton.

Now warm in love, now with'ring in thy bloom,

Loit in a convent's solitary gloom.

Pope.

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind; fullness.

To GLOOM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dismalness.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humours, and makes them grow sullen and inconvertible.

Collier of the Spleen.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involved, very often stands in need of such little incitements to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy.

Addison.

GLOOMY. adj. [from gloom.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without

The growing miseries, which Adam saw

Already in part, though bid in gloomiest shade,

To sorrow abandon'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,

Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,

Nor setting visits, nor the lightsome noon.

Dryden's Fables.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier,
just as the sun is bright or more overcast. Pope.

2. Dark of complexion.

Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flow'rs,

Hidest a fairer flow'r by gloomy Dis

Was gather'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.

GLORIED. adj. [from glory.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours. Not in use.

Old respect

As I suppose, toward your once glory'd friend,

My son, now captive, hither hath inform'd

Your younger feet, while mine call back with age

Came lagging after. Milton's Epistles.

GLORIFICATION. n. f. [glorification, French, from glorify.] The act of giving glory.

VOL. I.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Taylor.

To GLORIFY. v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifico, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in. Shaksp.

Justice is their virtue: that alone

Makes them fit sure, and glorifies the throne.

Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged.

Hosker.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alledged at that time as an argument for the truth. Hosker.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,

That we for thee may glorify the Lord. Shaksp.

All nations shall glorify thy name. Psalms.

Our bodies with which the apostle commands us to glorify God, as well as with our souls.

Duty of Man.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end; and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver. Tillotson.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.

Whosoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify.

Spenser on Ireland.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall,
Some odorous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

4. To exalt to glory in heaven; to raise to celestial beatitude.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him. John.

Whom he justified, them he also glorified.

Romans.

The members of the church remaining, being perfectly sanctified, shall be eternally glorified; then shall the whole church be truly and perfectly holy. Pearson.

The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner. Ayliffe's Parergon.

GLORIOUS. adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorieux, French.]

1. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.

They that are glorious must needs be factious;
for all bravery stands upon comparisons. Bacon.

2. Noble; illustrious; excellent. It is frequently used by theological writers, to express the brightness of triumphant sanctity rewarded in heaven.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world. Daniel.

He is glorious in respect of the brightness and splendor of his celestial body, still made more glorious and majestick by the authority which his Father hath committed to him of universal Judge. Nelson.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,
'Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;
If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,
He now defends the cause that once was thine.

Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends, -
And act like men who claim that glorious title.

Addison's Cato.

She must stand amongst the first servants of God, and be glorious amongst those that have fought the good fight. Law.

If there be nothing so glorious as doing good,
if there is nothing that makes us so like to God, then nothing can be so glorious in the use of our money, as to use it all in works of love and goodness. Law.

GLORIOUSLY. adv. [from glorious.]

Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

They inspire with those celestial flames, which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryden.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend.

Pope.

GLORY. n. f. [gloire, French; gloria, Latin. Among the old poets it was used sometimes as one syllable, glorie.]

1. Praise paid in adoration.

Glory to God in the highest.

Luke.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me into thy glory. Isaiah.

Then enter into glory, and resume

His seat at God's right hand, exalted high

Above all names in heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.

It is hardly possible for you to befech and in-treat God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life.

Law.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.

Glory is like a circle in the water,

Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,

'Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.

Shakespeare's Henry vi.

And with that word and warning soon was dight,

Each soldier longing for near coming glory.

Fairfax.

Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings,

There have been fewer friends on earth than kings. Cowley.

Can we imagine that neither the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea.

Burnet.

Your sex's glory 'tis to shine unknown,
Of all applause, be fonder of your own. Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not array'd like one of these. Matthew.

Treated so ill, chas'd from your throne,

Returning, you adorn the town;

And with a brave revenge do show

Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison's Spect.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;

The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.

From opening skies may streaming glories shine,

And saints embrace thee with a love like mine.

Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in picture.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South's Sermons.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and fits like a glory upon the countenance. Collier of the Spect.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Hoffman.

On death-beds some in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die. Young.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney.

To GLO'RY. v. n. [glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgment glorifying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the list and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakespeare.

Your glorifying is not good. 1 Corinthians.

Thou hast seen mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height. Addison's Cato.

This title of freeholder is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison's Freeholder.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? Atterbury.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Clarissa.

To GLOSE. v. a. To flatter; to colloque.

Hammer. See To GLOZE.

GLOSS. n. f. [γλῶσσα; glose, French.]

1. A scholium; a comment.

They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach,
With gen'ral voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flatter'ing gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Hewel.

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment. Hudibras.

In many places he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

They give the scandal, and the wise discern;
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryden.

Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method. Baker on Learning.

Indentures, covenants, articles they draw,
Larger as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. Superficial lustre. In this sense it seems to have another derivation; it has perhaps some affinity to glora.

His iron coat all over-grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whole glittering gloss dark'ned with filthy dust. Spenser.

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,

To men that understand you, words and weaknesses. Shakespeare.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss.

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than plates of brass. Bacon.

Weeds that the wind did toss
The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss, Like that of oil. Chapman's Heats.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. Saunders.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison's Spectator.

3. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation. This sense seems to partake of both the former.

Poor painters oft with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange, but vain conceit;
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker, Preface.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakespeare.

The common gloss

Of theologians. Milton.

To GLOSS. v. n. [gloser, French, from the noun.]

1. To comment.

Thou detain'st Brifeis in thy bands,

By prettily glossing on the gods commands. Dryd.

2. To make fly remarks.

Here equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing gloss'd, that Abra, serv'd so well. Prior.

To GLOSS. v. a.

1. To explain by comment.

In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws,
Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Donne.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation

Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker's Sermons.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?

You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Philips.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.

But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a saint-like show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden's Persius.

GLOSSARY. n. f. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, when dehbrum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo ara simulacrum dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries. Sittingfleet.

I could add another word to the glossary. Baker.

GLOSSATOR. n. f. [glossateur, French, from glossa.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence: but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.

GLOSSER. n. f. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.

2. A polisher.

GLOSSINESS. n. f. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

Their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt. Boyle.

GLOSSOGRAPHER. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γραφειν.] A scholiast; a commentator.

GLOSSOGRAPHY. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γραφειν.] The writing of commentaries.

GLOSSY. adj. [from gloss.] Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a person of place; he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water-cambler, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.

The rest entire

Shone with a glossy scarf. Milton.

His furcoat was a bearskin on his back;

His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,

For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden.

GLOVE. n. f. [glove, Saxon, from klafue, Danish, to divide.] Cover of the hands.

They new about like chaff i' th' wind;

For haste some left their masks behind,

Some could not flay their gloves to find. Drayton.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head

A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

To GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,

Weaken'd with grief, being now carag'd with grief,

Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou

nice crutch;

A scary gauntlet now, with joints of steel,

Must glove this hand. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The next he preys on is her palm,

That alms-giver of transpiring balm;

So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd;

Tender as 'twere a jelly glov'd. Cleveland.

GLOVER. n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife? Shakespeare.

To GLOUT. v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To pout; to look sullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks

From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,

Where, glouting round her neck, to fish she falls. Chapman.

Glouting with sullen spite, the fury shook

Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look. Garth.

To GLOW. v. n. [glopan, Saxon; gloeyen, Dutch.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But sthence silence lessneth not my fire,

But told it flames, and hid en it does glow,

I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser.

His goodly eyes,

That o'er the files and musters of the war

Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bead, now

turn

Their office upon a tawny front. Shakespeare.

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocence, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewell.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd

With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milton.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose

The mettled floods, when from their nostrils flows

The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison's Ovid.

How opening heav'n their happy regions show,

And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. South.

Fires that glow,
Shrinks of woe.

Pope.

3. To feel heat of body.

Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?

Addison's Cato.

The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands.

Guy.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.

With smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue.

Milton.

Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays.

Dryden.

A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage

A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;

Such heavenly figures from his pencil flow,
To warm with life his blended colours glow;

Admire the soft variety I'm lost.

Addison.

Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse.

Savage.

Fair ideas flow,
Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow.

Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,

Can move the god.

Pope.

Each pleasing blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow.

Pope.

Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole.

Pope.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

You strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well

The inward glowings of a heart in love.

Addison.

Forc'd compliments and formal bows
Will shew thee just above neglect;

The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will settle into cold respect.

Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire.

Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent Calm ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face.

Pope.

With furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's fnows.

Pope.

So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow

For others good, or melt at others woe.

Pope.

To praise is always hard,
When real virtue fires the glowing bard.

Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.

Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a full heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long.

Shadwell.

To GLOW. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool.

Shakespeare.

GLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.

2. Vehemence of passion.

3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain.

Shakespeare.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
Bathing in bright diversities of day.

Pope.

Such as suppose that the great fire might happily be blended with the ornamental, that the simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Raffaele could unite with the glow and buffle of a Fauno, or Tintoret, are totally mistaken.

Reynolds.

GLOWWORM. n. f. [glow and worm] A small creeping grub with a luminous tail.

The honey lags fiscal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes.

Shakespeare.

The glowworm shews the matten to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffectual fire.

A great light drowneeth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found

A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:

He held it dear, 'till by the springing day
Informed, he threw the worthless worm away.

Wallis

To GLOZE. v. n. [glezan, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to innuinate; to fawn.

Man will hearken to his glozing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton's Parad. Lost
So glaz'd the tempter, and his poem tun'd:
Into the heart of Eve his words made way.

Milton.

A false glozing parasite would call his fool-hardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass.

South.

Now for a glozing speech,
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship.

Philips.

2. To comment. This should be glose.

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France. Shakespeare's Henry v.

GLOZE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Flattery; innuination.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by.

Shakespeare.

2. Specious show; glos. Not used.

Precious couches full oft are shaken with a fever;

If them a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,

Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a love's fire?

Sidney.

GLOZEN. n. f. [from gloze.] A flatterer.

GLUE. n. f. [glu, French; gluten, Lat. glud, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a gelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Nat. History.

The driest and most transparent glue is the best.

Moxon.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse.

Blackmore.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water,
will make a sort of glue.

Arbuthnot.

To GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glu'd many friends to thee.

Shakespeare's Henry vi.

Who teacheth a fool is as one that glueeth a potthead together.

Eccles.

The custom of crowning the holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinsel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvass over the head of the figure.

Addison on Italy.

Mossy wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native lamm.

Denham.

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogenous hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest; that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton.

3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.

Those wasps in a honey-pot are sensul men, plunged in their lust and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshy lusts, do debase mens minds and clog their spirits; stick us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;

And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:

Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glu'd

Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd.

Dryden.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom give my clasping arms.

Pope.

GLUE-BOILER. n. f. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.

GLUE'R. n. f. [from glue.] One who cements with glue.

GLUM. adj. [A low cant word formed by corrupting gloom.] Sullen; stubbornly grave.

Some, when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well what then?

Guardian.

To GLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutio, Latin, to swallow; γλῦσι, Gr.]

1. To swallow; to devour.

'Till cram'd and gorg'd, nigh burst
With suck'd and glutted offal.

Milton.

2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to sate; to disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers.

Bacon.

Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites.

Denham.

What way remove
His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils.

Dryden.

No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end.

Dryden's Æn.

I found
The sickle ear soon glutted with the bound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new.

Prior.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's carcass glut the grave.
His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes.

Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor glut the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole.

Dryden.

4. To overfill; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once.

Arbuthnot.

5. To saturate.

The menstruum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it.

Boyle.

GLUT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Disgorged foul
Their devilish glut, clam'd thunderbolts, and hail

Milton's Paradise l. 8.

Of iron globes.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

5 N 2

So death

Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his rav'nous maw. Milton.

Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange.

A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope.

3. More than enough; overmuch.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.

The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage. Woodward.

GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutineux, French; from gluten, Latin.] Gluy; viscous; tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects; the one that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members. Bacon's Natural History.

Next this marble venom'd seat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.

Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GLUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from glutinous.] Viscosity; tenacity.

There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Cheyne.

GLUTTON. n. f. [glouton, French; from glutio, Latin, to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.

The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have castles baked.

Bacon's Natural History.

Through Macer's gullet the tuns down
While the vile glutton dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibbo's endless draught. Prior.

If a glutton was to say in excuse of his gluttony, that he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat, he would make as good an excuse for himself as the greedy, covetous, ambitious tradesman, that should say, he only deals in lawful business. Law.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.

The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love. Cowley.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Granville.

2b GLUTTONISE. v. n. [from glutton.] To play the glutton; to be luxurious.GLUTTONOUS. adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.

When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,
And take down th' interest in their glutinous
maws. Shakespeare.

The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous
age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we rake the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raleigh.

Well observe

The rule of not too much, by temperance taught In what thou eat'st and drunk'st; seeking from thence

Due nourishment, no glutinous delight. Milton.

GLUTTONOUSLY. adv. [from gluttonous.] With the voracity of a glutton.GLUTTONY. n. f. [gluttonie, French; from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

Gluttony, a vice in a great fortune, a curse in a small. Holiday.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stone. Milton.

Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Dryden's Juvenal.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry;
but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion;
in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbutnot.

GLUY. adj. [from glue.] Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a gluy spumous matter. Harvey on Conf.

With gluy wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin combs. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

Whatever is the composition of the vapour let it have but one quality of being very gluy or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grotto. Addison.

GLYN. n. f. [Irish; gleann, glyn, plur. Erse; glenn, Scottish.] A hollow between two mountains.

Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he did thrust them up within those narrow corners and glyns under the mountain's foot. Spenser.

TO GNAR. } v. n. [gnypnan, Saxon; knorren, Dutch.] To growl; to murmur; to snarl.

When he 'gan to rear his bristles strong,
And felly gnar, until day's enemy
Did him appease. Spenser.

Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first. Shakespeare.

Gnarling sorrow bath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light. Shakespeare's Richard II.

The gnarling porter durst not whine for doubt;
Still were the furies while their foreigner spoke. Fairfax.

GNARLED. adj. [gnar, nar, or nurr, is in Staffordshire a hard knot of wood which boys drive with sticks.] Knotty.

Merciful heav'n!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt
Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.

TO GNASH. v. a. [knaschen, Dutch.] To strike together; to clash.

The feet, who could not yet this wrath affudge,
Row'd his green eyes, that sparkl'd with his rage,
And gnash'd his teeth. Dryden's Virgil.

TO GNASH. v. n.

1. To grind or collide the teeth.
He shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away. Psalms.

There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Matthew.

2. To rage even to collision of the teeth; to fume; to growl.

His great iron teeth he still did grind,
And grimly gnash'd, threatening revenge in vain. Spenser.

They gnashed upon me with their teeth. Psalms.

They him laid
Gnashing for anguish, and despite and shame,
To find himself not matchless. Milton.

With boiling rage Atreides burn'd,
And foam betwixt his gnashing grienders churn'd. Dryden.

GNAT. n. f. [gnat, Saxon.]

1. A small winged stinging insect.

Her whip of cricket's bone, the lash of film;
Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat. Shaksp.

Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. Matthew.

GNATFLOWER. n. f. [gnat and flower.] A flower, otherwise called the bee-flower.GNATSNAPPER. n. f. [gnat and snapper.] A bird so called, because he lives by catching gnats.

They deny that any bird is to be eaten whole,
but only the gnatsnapper. Hakewill on Providence.

TO GNAW. v. a. [gnagan, Saxon; knaghen, Dutch.]

1. To eat by degrees; to devour by slow corrosion.

A knowing fellow, that would gnaw a man
Like to a vermine, with his hellish braine,
And many an honest soule, even quick had slain. Chapman.

To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is giv'n, as raw Young soldiers at their exercisings gnaw. Dryd.

2. To bite in agony or rage.

Alas, why gnaw you to your nether lip?
Some bloody passion shakes your very frame. Shakespeare's Othello.

They gnawed their tongues for pain. Rom.

He comely fell, and dying gnaw'd the ground. Dryden.

3. To wear away by biting.

Gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder,
I gain'd my freedom. Shaksp. Comedy of Errors.

Like rotten fruit I fall, worn like a cloth,
Gnaw'd into rage by the devouring moth. Sanctus.

A lion, hampered in a net, called to a mouse to help him out of the snare: the mouse gnawed
the threads to pieces, and set the lion at liberty. L'Estrange.

gnaw. Dryden.

TO GNAW. v. n. To exercise the teeth.

It is now used actively.

I might well, like the spaniel, gnaw upon the chain that ties me; but I should sooner mar my teeth than procure liberty. Sidney.

See the hell of having a false woman: my bed shall be abused, my cods unslack'd, my reputation gnaw'd at. Shakespeare.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon. Shaksp.

GNAWER. n. f. [from gnaw.] One that gnaws.GNOMON. n. f. [gnomon.] The hand or pin of a dial.

The gnomon of every dial is supposed to represent the axis of the world, and therefore the two ends or extremities thereof must directly answer to the north and south pole. Harris.

There were from great antiquity sun-dials, by the shadow of a style or gnomon, denoting the hours of the day. Brown.

GNOMONICKS. n. f. [gnomonice.] A science which makes a part of the mathematics: it teaches to find a just proportion of shadows for the construction of all kinds of sun and moon dials, and for knowing what o'clock it is by means thereof; as also of a gnomon or stile that throws off the shadow for this purpose. Trevoux.

TO GO. v. n. pret. I went; I have gone.

[gan, Saxon. This was probably

We must enquire further what is the connexion of that sentence with those that go before it, and those which follow it. Watts.

40. To reach or be extended to any degree.

Can another man perceive that I am conscious of any thing, when I perceive it not myself? No man's knowledge here can go beyond his experience. Locke.

41. To extend to consequences.

It is not our master that either directs or takes notice of these: it goes a great way barely to permit them. L'Estrange.

42. To reach by effects.

Considering the cheapness, so much money might go farther than a sum ten times greater could do now. Wilkins.

43. To extend in meaning.

His amorous expressions go no farther than virtue may allow. Dryden's Ovid, Preface.

44. To spread; to be dispersed; to reach.

Whose flesh, torn off by lumps, the rav'nous foe

In morsels cut, to make it farther go. Tate.

45. To have influence; to be of weight; to be of value.

I had another reason to decline it, that ever uses to go far with me upon all new inventions or experiments; which is, that the best trial of them is by time, and observing whether they live or no. Temple.

'Tis a rule that goes a great way in the government of a sober man's life, not to put any thing to hazard that may be secured by industry, consideration, or circumspection. L'Estrange.

Whatever appears against their prevailing vice goes for nothing, being either not applied, or passing for libel and slander. Swift.

46. To be rated one with another; to be considered with regard to greater or less worth.

I think, as the world goes, he was a good sort of man enough. Arbutnot.

47. To contribute; to conduce; to concur; to be an ingredient.

The medicines which go to the ointments are so strong, that, if they were used inwards, they would kill those that use them. Bacon.

More parts of the greater wheels go to the making one part of their lines. Glanville's Scyllis.

There goes a great many qualifications to the complementing this relation: there is no small share of honour and confidence and sufficiency required. Collier of Friendship.

I give the sex their revenge, by laying together the many vicious characters that prevail in the male world, and shewing the different ingredients that go to the making up of such different humours and constitutions. Adelphon.

Something better and greater than high birth and quality must go toward acquiring those demonstrations of publick esteem and love. Swift.

48. To fall out, or terminate; to succeed.

Your strong possession much more than your right,

Or else it must go wrong with you and me. Shakspeare's King John.

Howe'er the business goes, you have made fault i' th' boldness of your speech. Shakspeare.

I will send to thy father, and they shall declare unto him how things go with thee. Tobit.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory shall go on the one side; and yet, if it be tried by the gross, it would go on the other side. Bacon.

It has been the constant observation of all, that if a minister had a cause depending in the court, it was ten to one but it went against him. South.

At the time of the prince's landing, the father, easily foreseeing how things would go, went over, like many others, to the prince. Swift.

Whether the cause goes for me or against me, you must pay me the reward. Watts's Logic.

49. To be in any state. This sense is impersonal.

It shall go ill with him that is left in his tabernacle. Job.

He called his name Beriah, because it went evil with his house. 1 Chronicles.

50. To proceed in train or consequence.

How goes the night, boy? —The moon is down; I have not heard the clock;

And she goes down at twelve. Shakspeare.

I had hope,

When violence was ceased, and war on earth, All would have then gone well. Milton.

Duration in itself is to be considered as going on in one constant, equal, uniform course. Locke.

51. To Go about. To attempt; to endeavour; to set one's self to any business.

O dear father, It is thy business that I go about. Shakspeare.

I lost him; but so found, as well I saw He could not lose himself, but went about His father's business. Milton.

Which answer exceedingly united the vulgar minds to them, who concurred only with them as they saw them like to prevail in what they went about. Clarendon.

Some men, from a false persuasion that they cannot reform their lives, and root out their old vicious habits, never so much as attempt, endeavour, or go about it. South.

Either my book is plainly enough written to be rightly understood by those who peruse it with attention and indifference, or else I have writ mine so obscurely that it is in vain to go about to mend it. Locke.

They never go about, as in former times, to hide or palliate their vices; but expose them freely to view. Swift.

52. To Go aside. To err; to deviate from the right.

If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him. Numbers.

53. To Go between. To interpose; to moderate between two.

I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her; for, indeed, he was mad for her. Shakspeare.

54. To Go by. To pass away unnoticed.

Do not you come my tardiness to chide, That laps'd in time and passion, lets go by Th' important acting of your dread command? Shakspeare's Hamlet.

So much the more our carver's excellent, Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her

As the liv'd now. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

What 's that to us? The time goes by; away. Shakspeare.

55. To Go by. To find or get in the conclusion.

In argument with men a woman ever Goes by the worse whatever be her cause. Milton.

He 's sure to go by the worst that contends with an adversary that is too mighty for him. L'Estrange.

56. To Go by. To observe as a rule.

'Tis not to be supposed, that by searching one can positively judge of the size and form of a stone; and indeed the frequency of the fits, and violence of the symptoms, are a better rule to go by. Sharp's Surgery.

57. To Go down. To be swallowed; to be received, not rejected.

Nothing so ridiculous, nothing so impossible, but it goes down whole with him for truth and earnest. L'Estrange.

Folly will not easily go down in its own natural form with discerning judges. Dryden.

If he be hungry, bread will go down. Locke.

Ministers are so wise to leave their proceedings to be accounted for by reasoners at a distance, who often mould them into the systems that do not only go down very well in the coffeehouse, but are supplies for pamphlets in the present age. Swift.

58. To Go in and out. To do the business of life.

The lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in. Psalms.

59. To Go in and out. To be at liberty.

He shall go in and out, and find pasture. John.

60. To Go off. To die; to go out of life; to decaise.

I would the friends we miss were safe arrived:
Some must go off; and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Shakf.
In this manner he went off, not like a man that departed out of life, but one that returned to his abode. Tatler.

61. To Go off. To depart from a post.

The leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak. Shakf.

62. To Go on. To make attack.

Bold Cethegus,
Whose valour I have turn'd into his poison,
And prais'd so to daring, as he would Go on upon the gods. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

63. To Go on. To proceed.

He found it a great war to keep that peace, but was fain to go on in his story. Sidney.

He that desires only that the work of God and religion shall go on, is pleas'd with it, whoever is the instrument. Taylor.

I have escap'd many threats of ill fits by these motions: if they go on, the only police I have dealt with is wool from the belly of a fat sheep.

To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength, to consider that she is to shine forever with new accessions of glory, and brighten to all eternity, is agreeable. Addison.

Go on cheerfully in the glorious course you have undertaken. Addison.

Copious bleeding is the most effectual remedy in the beginning of the disease; but when the expectorations go on successfully, not so proper, because it sometimes suppresses it. Arbuthnot.

I have already handled some abuses during the late management, and in convenient time shall go on with the rest. Swift.

When we had found that design impracticable, we should not have gone on in to expensive a management of it. Swift.

Many clergy men write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extraordinary explications.

I wish you health to go on with that noble work.

64. To Go over. To revolt; to betake himself to another party.

In the change of religion, men of ordinary understandings don't so much consider the principles as the practice of those to whom they go over. Addison on Italy.

Power, which, according to the old maxim, was used to follow, is now gone over to money.

65. To Go out. To go upon any expedition.

You need not have prick'd me: there are other men fitter to go out than I. Shakf.

66. To Go out. To be extinguished.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out,
With titles blown from adulation? Shakf.
Spirit of wine burned till it go out of itself, will burn no more. Bacon's Nat. History.

The care of a state, or an army, ought to be as constant as the chymist's fire, to make any great production; and if it goes out for an hour, perhaps the whole operation fails. Temple.

The morning, as mistaken, turns about;
And all her early fires again go out. Dryden.

Let the acquaintance be decently buried, and the flame rather go out than be smothered. Collier.
My blood runs cold, my heart forgets to heave,
And life itself goes out at thy displeasure. Addison.

And at her felt approach and secret might,
Art after art goes out, and all is night. Pope.

67. To Go through. To perform thoroughly; to execute.

Finding Pyrocles every way able to go through with that kind of life, he was as desirous for his sake as for his own to enter into it. Sidney.

If you can as well go through with the statute laws of that land, I will think you have not lost all your time there. Spenser.

Kings ought not to suffer their council to go through with the resolution and direction, as if it depended on them, but take the matter back into their own hands. Bacon.

He much feared the earl of Arundel had not steadiness of mind enough to go through with such an undertaking. Clarendon.

The amazing difficulty and greatness of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting heartily about such a task, as he despairs ever to go through with it. South.

The powers in Germany are borrowing money,
in order to go through their part of the expense.

68. To Go through. To suffer; to under-dergo.

I tell thee that it is absolutely necessary for the common good that thou shouldst go through this operation. Arbuthnot.

69. To Go upon. To take as a principle.

This supposition I have gone upon through those papers. Addison.

70. The senses of this word are very indifferent; its general notion is motion or progression. It commonly expresses passage from a place, in opposition to come.
This is often observable even in figurative expressions. We say, the words that go before and that come after: to-day goes away and to-morrow comes.

Go to. interj. Come, come, take the right course. A scornful exhortation.

Go to then, O thou far renowned son
Of great Apollo; shew thy famous might In medicine. Spenser.

Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow:
Let me be clear of thee. Shakf.

My favour is not bought with words like these:
Go to; you'll teach your tongue another tale.

GO-BETWEEN. n. f. [go and between.] One that transacts business by running between two parties. Commonly in an ill sense.

Even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven. Shakf.

GO-BY. n. f. Delusion; artifice; circum-vention; overreach.

Except an apprentice is instructed how to adulterate and varnish, and give you the go-by upon occasion, his master may be charged with neglect.

GO-CART. n. f. [go and cart.] A machine in which children are enclosed to teach them to walk, and which they push forward without danger of falling.

Young children, who are try'd in
Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding,
When members knit, and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer. Prior.

GOAD. n. f. [gab, Saxon.] A pointed instrument with which oxen are driven forward.

Of in his harden'd hand a goad he bears. Pope.

TO GOAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prick or drive with the goad.

2. To incite; to stimulate; to instigate;
to drive forward.

Most dangerous

Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Shakf.

Goaded with most sharp occasions,
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to The use of your own virtues. Shakf.

Of all that breathes the various progeny,
Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee. Dryd.

GOAL. n. f. [gaule, French, a long pole, set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. The landmark set up to bound a race;

the point marked out to which racers run.

As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields,
Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

And the slope fun his upward beam
Shoots against the dusky pole,
Pacing toward the other goal. Milton.

2. The starting point.

Hail thou beheld, when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race? Dryden's Virgil.

3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.

Each individual seeks a several goal;
But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole. Pope.

So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole. Pope.

4. It is sometimes improperly written for goal, or jail.

GOAL. n. f. [goror, Welsh.] Any edging sewed upon cloth to strengthen it. Skinner.

GOAT. n. f. [gat, Saxon and Scottish.]
A ruminant animal that seems a middle species between deer and sheep.

Gall of goat, and slips of yew. Shakf.
We Cyclops care not for your goat-fed love,
Nor other hest ones; we are better fare. Chapm.

You may draw naked boys riding and playing with their papermills uput goats, eagles, or dolphins. Prætorius.

The little bear that rock'd the mighty Jove,
The swan whole borrow'd shape conceal'd his love.

Are grac'd with light; the nursing goat's repaid
With heav'n, and duty rais'd the pious maid.

capri.] A plant.

GOAT'CHAFFER. n. f. An insect; a kind of beetle. Bailey.

GOAT'HERD. n. f. [gat and hyrb, Sax.
a feeder or tender.] One whose employment is to tend goats.

Is not think I am goatherd proud,
That sits on yonder bank,
Whose straying herd himself doth shroud
Among the bushes rank? Spenser's Pastoral.

They first gave the goatherd good contentment, and the marquis and his servant chased the k d
about the flock. Watson.

GOAT'MARJORAM. n. f. The same with GOATBEARD.

GOAT'SMILK. n. f. [goat and milk. This is more properly two words.]

After the fever and such like accidents are dis-minished, asses and goat's milk may be necessary.

GOAT'MILKER. n. f. [goat and milker.]
A kind of owl so called from sucking goats. Bailey.

GOATS'RUE. n. f. [galega.] A plant.

Goat's Rue has the reputation of being a great alexipharmick and sudorifick: the Italians eat it raw and boiled; with us it is of no esteem. Hill.

GOAT'SKIN. n. f. [goat and skin.]

Then fill'd two goat'skins, with her hands divine:
With water one, and one with fable wine. Pope.

GOATS'THORN. n. f. [goat and thorn.]
An herb.

a goat in any quality: as rankness; lust.

GOB

An admirable evasion of a whoremaster, man, to lay his goutish disposition on the change of a star. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The last is notorious for its goutish smell, and tastes not unlike the beard of that lecherous animal. More again! Atkeison.

GOB. n. f. [gobe, French.] A small quantity. A low word.

Do'st think I have so little wit as to part with such a gob of money? L'Estrange.

GOBBET. n. f. [gobe, French.] A mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once.

Therewith she spew'd, out of her filthy maw, A flood of poison, horrible and black, Full of great lumps of flesh and goblets raw. Spenser.

By devilish policy art thou grown great, As I like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

The cooks, slicing it into little goblets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandy's Travels.

The giant gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood, Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den, Belching raw goblets from his maw, o'ercharg'd With purple wine and cruddled gore confus'd. Addison.

To GOBBET. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow at a mouthful. A low word.

Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and goblets up both together. L'Estrange.

To GOBBLE. v. a. [gobber, to swallow, old French.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.

The sheep were so keen upon the scorns, that they gobbled up now and then a piece of the coat along with them. L'Estrange.

Of last year's corn in barn great store; Fat turkeys gobbling at the door. Prior.

The time too precious now to waste, And supper gobbled up in haste, Again aflash to cards they run. Swift.

GOBBLER. n. f. [from gobble.] One that devours in haste; a gormand; a greedy eater.

GOBLET. n. f. [goblet, French.] A bowl, or cup, that holds a large draught.

My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shaksp.
We love not loaded boards, and goblets crown'd;
But free from surfeits our repose is found. Donham.

Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught; Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought. Dryden.

GOBLIN. n. f. [French; gobeline, which Spenser has once retained; writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that elise and goblin is Guelph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nurses with the name of the other: but it appears that elise is Welsh, and much older than those factions. Eliff nijbon, are phantoms of the night, and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named gobolli, from which gobeline might be derived.]

1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.

Angels and ministers of grace defend us! Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd, Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell! Shakespeare.

To whom the goblin, full of wrath, reply'd, Art thou that traitor angel? Milton's Par. Lost.

GOD

Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark. Locke.

2. A fairy; an elf.

His son was Elfinel, who overcame The wicked gobbelines in bloody field;
But Elfant was of most renowned fame,
Who of all crystal did Panthea build. Spenser.

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Mean time the village rouses up the fire,
While well attested, and as well believ'd,
Heard solemn goes the goblin story round. Thomf.

GOD. n. f. [gob, Saxon, which likewise signifies good. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonick dialects.]

1. The Supreme Being.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. John.

God above
Deal between thee and me. Shakespeare.
All the churches of God are united into one by the unity of discipline and government, by virtue whereof the same Christ ruleth in them all. Pearson.

The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy. Grew's Cosmologia.

2. A false god; an idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed. Exod.
As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods,
They kill us for their sport. Shaksp. King Lear.

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing north, and Hyperborean seas,
And Scythian colds, and Thracian's winter coast,
Where stand thy flocks, and thou art honour'd most. Dryden.

3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly. Philippians.

I am not Licio,
But one that seems to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion. Shakespeare.

To GOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man
Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay god-ed me, indeed. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Hop roots so well chosen let skilful go set;
The goelen and younger, the better I love;
Well galled and pared, the better they prove. Tusser.

Go'ER. n. f. [from go.]

1. One that goes; a runner.

I would they were in Africk both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back. Shakespeare's Cymb.

Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate
them.

But goers backward. Shakespeare.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me. Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.

The evil was so far from being a good dancer,
that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

3. The foot. Obsolete.

A double mantle, cast
A'thwart his shoulders, his faire goers grac'd
With fitted shoes. Chapman.

To Go'GGLE. v. n. To look askint.

Inflam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place,
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl. Hudibras.

Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want. Dryden.

GOGGLE-EYED. adj. [pcegl exen, Sax.] Squint-eyed; not looking straight.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves. Astham.

VOL. I.

Go'ING. n. f. [from go.]

1. The act of walking.

When nobles are their tailors tutors,
No hereticks burnt, but wenches suitors,
Then comes the time, who lives to feel't,
That going shall be us'd with feet. Shakespeare.

2. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight: that is the twentieth part of their going. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

3. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes
Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound. Milton.

Go'LA. n. f. The same with CYMATIUM.
In a cornice the goles or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble flow. Speilator.

GOLD. n. f. [gold, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geel, as Sealiger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelten, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money.
Peacham on Drawing.]

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies, not to be injured either by air, or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt.
Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. Pure Gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Fossils.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixations, phantoms or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Natural History.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shaksp.

We readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.

The gold-fringed vessel which mar-tempests bear,
He sees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden.

2. Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit as a motive
The sopper to effect what I intended. Shaksp.

Thou that so stoutly had resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows.

Shakespeare's Henry vi.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσὸν ἀγαθόν; and animamque moremque aureos educit in æstra. Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakespeare.

GOLD of Pleasure. n. f. [myagrum.] A plant.

Go'LDBEATER. n. f. [gold and beat.]

One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold to gild other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to allow with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Boyle.

Go'LDBEATER'S Skin. n. f. The intesti-num rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.

When your gillyflowers blow, if they break
the pod, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Mortimer.

Go'LDBOUND. adj. [gold and bound.]
Encompassed with gold.

Thy air,
Thou other goldbound brow is like the first. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Go'LDEN. adj. [from gold.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.
O would to God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were reulth steel to fear me to the brain. Shaksp.
Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep. Shakespeare.

'Tis better to be lowly born
Than wear a golden sorrow. Shakespeare.

Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Crashaw.

To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
How'er she shines all golden to you now. Dryden.

And see the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining soft on many a golden cloud. Rowe.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.

Golden rusteting hath a gold coloured coat under a russet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour. Mortimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.

I have bought
Golden opinions from all sort of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

That verse which they commonly call golden, has two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.

Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others as we would have others deal with us. Martin's Logic.

5. Happy; resembling the age of gold.

Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and flit the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world. Shakespeare.

An universe of death! which God by curse Created evil; for evil only good. Milton.

From an ill cause to draw a good effect. Dryden.

Notwithstanding this criticism the verses were good. Spectator.

A man is no more to be praised upon this account, than because he has a regular pulse and a good digestion. Addison.

Ah! ne'er to dire a thirst of glory boast,
Nor in the critic let the man be lost!
Good nature and good sense must ever join;
To err is human, to forgive, divine. Pope.

2. Proper; fit; convenient; right; not wrong.
Amongst a man's peers a man shall be sure of familiarity, and therefore it is good a little to keep flate; amongst a man's inferiors one shall be sure of reverence, and therefore it is good a little to be familiar. Bacon.

If you think good, give Martius leave. Bacon.

It was a good time to comply with the impetuosity of the gentlemen of Suffolk. Clarendon.

3. Conducive to happiness.
It is not good that the man should be alone. Genesis.

The only honour of the wishing game. Pope.

19. Cheerful; gay. Joined with any words expressing temper of mind.
They may be of good comfort, and ever go cheerfully about their own affairs. Alice.

Quietness improves into cheerfulness, enough to make me just to good humoured as to wish that world well. Pope.

20. Considerable; not small though not very great.
A good while ago God made choice that the gentiles by my mouth should hear the word. Acts.

The plant, having a great stalk and top, doch prey upon the grass a good way about by drawing the juice of the earth from it. Bacon.

Myrtle and pomegranate, if they be planted though a good space one from the other, will mix. Peaſham on Drawing.

The king had provided a good fleet, and a body of three thousand foot to be embarked. Clarendon.

We may suppose a great many degrees of lightness and heaviness in these earthy particles, so as many of them might float in the air a good while, like exhalations, before they fell down. Bacon.

They held a good share of civil and military employments during the whole time of the usurpation. Swift.

21. Elegant; decent; delicate: with breeding.

If the critic has published nothing but rules and observations in criticism, I then consider whether there be a propriety and elegance in his thoughts and words, clearness and delicacy in his remarks, wit and good breeding in his rail-
Addison's Guardian.

Mankind have been forced to invent a kind of artificial humanity, which is what we express by the word good breeding.
Addison.

Those among them, who return into their several countries, are sure to be followed and imitated as the greatest patterns of wit and good-breeding.
Swift.

22. Real; serious; not feigned.

Love not in good earnest, nor no farther in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou may'st in honour come off again.
Shakspeare.

23. Rich; of credit; able to fulfil engagements.

Antonio is a good man: my meaning, in saying that he is a good man, is to have you understand me that he is sufficient.
Shakspeare.

24. Having moral qualities, such as are wished; virtuous; pious; religious: applied both to persons and actions. Not bad; not evil.

For a good man some would even dare to die.
Romans.

The woman hath wrought a good work upon me.
Matthew.

All man's works on me,
Good or not good, ingraft my merit, these Shall perfect, and for these my death shall pay.
Milton.

What reward
Awaits the good, the rest what punishment.
Milton.

The only Son of light
In a dark age against example good,
Against allurement.
Milton.

Such follow him, as shall be registred
Part good, part bad, of bad the larger scroll.
Milton.

Grant the had what happiness they would,
One they must want, which is to pass for good.
Pope.

Why drew Marcellus' good bishop purer breath,
When nature sicken'd, and each gale was death?
Pope.

Such was Reformation, not more learn'd than good,
With manners generous as his noble blood.
Pope.

No farther intercourse with Heaven had he,
But left good works to men of low degree.
Harte.

25. Kind; soft; benevolent.

Manners being so turned in her, that where at first I king her manners did breed good will, now good will became the chief cause of liking her manners.
Sidney.

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will towards men.
Luke.

Without good nature man is but a better kind of vermin.
Bacon.

Here we are lov'd, and there we love;
Good nature now and passion throve
Which of the two should be above,
And laws unto the other give.
Swetling.

'Tis no wonder if that which affords so little glory to God, hath no more good will for men.
Dancy at Pity.

When you shall see him, sir, to die for pity,
'Twere such a thing, 'twould so deserve the world,
'Twould make the people think you were good natur'd.
Donham.

To teach him betimes to love and be good natur'd to others, is to lay early the true foundation of an honest man.
Locke.

Good sense and good nature are never separated,
though the ignorant world has thought otherwise.
Dryden.

Affability, mildness, tenderness, and a word which I would fain bring back to its original fignification of virtue, I mean good nature, are of daily use.

Dryden.

This doctrine of God's good will towards men, this command of men's proportionable good will to one another, is not this the very body and substance, this the very spirit and life of our Sa-vour's whole institution?
Sprat.

It was his greatest pleasure to spread his healing wings over every place, and to make every one sensible of his good will to mankind.
Calamy.

How could you guide the young good natur'd
juvener,
And drive him from you with so stern an air.
Addison's Cato.

26. Favourable; loving.

But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt.
Samuel.

Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart.
Psalms.

You have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you.
Theophilus.

This idea must necessarily be adequate, being referred to nothing else but itself, nor made by any other original but the good liking and will of him that first made this combination.
Locke.

27. Companionable; sociable; merry.
Often used ironically.

Though he did not draw the good fellows to him by drinking, yet he eat well.
Clarendon.

Not being permitted to drink without eating, will prevent the custom of having the cup often at his nose; a dangerous beginning and preparation to good fellowship.
Locke.

It was well known, that sir Roger had been a good fellow in his youth.
Arbutnot.

28. It is sometimes used as an epithet of slight contempt, implying a kind of negative virtue or bare freedom from ill.

My good man, as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause.
Shakspeare.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant.
Addison's Spectator.

29. In a ludicrous sense.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to loose themselves in the sunshine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness.
Spranger.

30. Heartly; earnest; not dubious.

He, that saw the time fit for the delivery he intended, called unto us to follow him, which we both, bound by oath, and willing by good will, obeyed.
Sidney.

The good will of the nation to the present war has been since but too much experienced by the successes that have attended it.
Temple.

Good will, the said, my want of strength supplies:
And diligence shall give what age denies.
Dryden.

31. In Good time. Not too fall.

In good time, replies another, you have heard them dispute against a vacuum in the schools.
Catler on Human Reason.

32. In Good faith. Really; seriously.

What, must I hold a candle to my shame?
They in themselves, good faith are too too light.
Shakspeare.

33. Good. [To make.] To keep; to maintain; not to give up; not to abandon.

There died upon the place all the chieftains, all making good the fight without any ground given.
Bacon's Henry VII.

He forced them to retire in spite of the dangers, which were placed there to make them then retreat.
Clarendon.

Since we claim a proper interest above all in the presentment rights of the household of faith, then to make good that claim, we are obliged above all to conform to the proper manner and virtues that belong to this household.
Sprat.

He without fear a dangerous war pursued;
As he made him at the danger chase,
So did he make it good a victor's score.
Dryden.

34. Good. [To make.] To confirm; to establish.

I farther will maintain
Upon his bad life to make all this good.
Shakspeare.

To make good this explication of the article, it will be necessary to prove that the church, which our Saviour founded and the apostles gathered, was to receive a constant and perpetual blessing.
Pearson.

These propositions I shall endeavour to make good.
Smaiting.

35. Good. [To make.] To perform.

While she so far extends her grace,
She makes but good the promise of her face.
Waller.

36. Good. [To make.] To supply.

Every distinct being has somewhat peculiar to itself, to make good in one circumstance what it wants in another.
L'Estrange.

Good. n. f.

1. That which physically contributes to happiness; benefit; advantage; the contrary to evil or misery.

I fear the emperor means no good to us.
Shakspeare's Titus Andronicus.

Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me. Shakspeare.
He was indifferently 'twixt them, doing neither good nor harm.
Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Love with fear the only God,
Merciful over all his works, with good
Still overcoming evil.
Milton.

God is also in sleep, and dreams advise,
Which he hath sent propitious, some great good Prefaging.
Milton.

Nature in man's heart, her laws doth pen,
Prescribing truth to wit, and good to will.
Davies.

The lessening or escaping of evil is to be re-ckoned under the notion of good: the lessening or loss of good is to be reckoned under the notion of evil.
Wilkins.

This caution will have also this good in it, that it will put them upon considering, and teach them
the necessity of examining more than they do.
Locke.

Good is what is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us; or else to procure or preserve us in the possession of any other good, or absence of any evil.
Locke.

Refuse to leave thy destin'd charge too soon,
And for the church's good defer thy own.
Prior.

Works may have more wit than does them
good,
As bodies perish through excess of blood.
Pope.

A thirst after truth, and a desire of good, are principles which still act with a great and universal force.
Rogers.

2. Prosperity; advancement.

If he had employ'd
Those excellent gifts of fortune and of nature
Unto the good, not ruin of the state.
Ben Jonson.

3. Earnest; not jest.

The good woman never died after this, 'till she came to die for good and all.
L'Estrange.

4. Moral qualities, such as are desirable; virtue; righteousness; piety; the contrary to wickedness.

Depart from evil and do good.
Psalms.

Not only carnal good from evil does not justify;
but no good, no not a purposed good, can make evil good.
Holyday.

O turn, like one of us is 'Mon become,
To know both good and evil, since his taste
Of that defended fruit, but let him boast
His knowledge of good, evil, and evil got,
Happened at fall'd him to have known
Good by itself, and evil not at all.
Milton.

Empty of all good, wherein consists Woman's domestic honour, and chief pride.
Milton.

By good, I question not but good, morally so called bonum hominum, ought, chiefly at least, to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure the bonum utile or pecuniarium, hardly come into any account here.
South.

Nor holds this earth a more deserving knight
For virtue, valour, and for noble blood,
Truth, honour, all that is compriz'd in good.

Dryden.

5. Good placed after bad, with as, seems a substantive; but the expression is, I think, vitious; and good is rather an adjective elliptically used, or it may be considered as adverbial. See Good, adv.

The pilot must intend some port before he steers his course, or he had as good leave his vessel to the direction of the winds, and the government of the waves.

South.

Without good nature and gratitude, man had as good live in a wilderness as in a society.

L'Estrange.

Good, adv.

1. Well; not ill; not amiss.

2. As Good. No worse.

Was I to have never parted from thy side,
As good have grown there still a lifeless rib.

Milton.

Says the cuckoo to the hawk, Had you not as good have been eating worms now as pigeons?

L'Estrange.

Good, interjection. Well! right! It is sometimes used ironically.

GOOD-CONDITIONED, adj. Without ill qualities or symptoms. Used both of things and persons, but not elegantly.

No surgeon dilates an abscess of any kind by injections, when the pus is good-conditioned.

Sharp's Surgery.

GOOD-NOW, interjection.

1. In good time; a la bonne heure. A gentle exclamation of entreaty. It is now a low word.

Good-now, sit down, and tell me, 'he that knows,

Why this same watch?

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. A soft exclamation of wonder.

Good-now, good-now, how your devotions jump with mine!

Dryden.

GOODLINESS, n. f. [from goodly.] Beauty; grace; elegance.

She sung this song with a voice no less beautiful to his ears, than her goodliness was full of harmony to his eyes.

Sidney.

The stateliness of houses, the goodliness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye.

Hosker.

GOODLY, adj. [from good.]

1. Beautiful; graceful; fine; splendid. Little in use.

A prince of a goodly aspect, and the more goodly by a grave majesty, wherewith his mind did deck his outward graces.

Sidney.

A goodly city is this Antium.

Shakespeare.

Patience and sorrow drove

Which should express her goodliness: you have seen sunshine and rain at once. Her smiles and tears were like a wetter May.

Shakespeare.

Here from gracious England have I offer

Of goodly thousands.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Rebeckah took goodly raiment of her eldest son Esau, and put them upon Jacob.

Genesis.

There was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he.

1 Sam.

Both younger than they were; of stature more; And all their formes, much goodlier then before.

Chapman.

He had not made them any recompence for their goodly houses and olive gardens, destroyed in the former wars.

Kneller.

The goodliest man of men since born

His sons, the fairest of her daughters Eve.

Milton.

Of the fourth Edward was his noble song;

Three, goodly, valiant, beautiful, and young.

Waller.

Not long since, walking in the field,
A, muric and I, we there beheld

A goodly fruit, which, tempting me,
I would have pluck'd.

Waller.

How full of ornament is all I view
In all its parts! and seems as beautiful as new:
O goodly order'd work! O power divine!
Of thee I am, and what I am is thine!

His eldest born, a goodly youth to view,
Excell'd the rest in shape and outward shew;
Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd,
But of a heavy, dull, degen'rate mind.

Dryden.

2. Bulky; swelling; affectedly turgid.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,
Goodly and great he sails behind his link.

Dryd.

3. Happy; desirable; gay.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately inured to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor.

Spenser.

We have many goodly days to see.

Shakespeare.

GOODLY, adv. Excellently. Obsolete.

There Alma, like a virgin queen most bright,
Dost flourish in all beauty excellent;
And to her guests doth bounteous banquet dight,
Attempted goodly well for health and for delight.

Spenser.

GOODLYHOOD, n. f. [from goodly.] Grace; goodness. Obsolete.

But mote thy goodlyhood forgive it me,
To meet which of the gods I shall thee name.

Spenser.

GOODMAN, n. f. [good and man.]

1. A slight appellation of civility: generally ironical.

How now, what's the matter? part.
—With you, goodman boy, if you please: come,

I'll fetch ye.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. A rustick term of compliment; gaffer.

Nay, hear you, goodman deliver.

Shakespeare.

But see the sun-beams bright to labour warn,

And gild the thatch of goodman Hodge's barn.

Gay's Past.

Old goodman Dobson of the green,
Remembers he the trees has seen.

Swift.

GOODNESS, n. f. [from good.] Desirable qualities either moral or physical; kindness; favour.

If for any thing he loved greatness, it was because therein he might exercise his goodness.

Sidney.

There is in all things an appetite or desire, whereby they incline to something which they may be; all which perfections are contained under the general name of goodness.

Hosker.

All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.

—Yes, that goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion:
The goodness of your intercepted packets
You writ to the pope against the king: your goodness,

Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

There's no goodness in thy race.

Shakespeare.

There is a general, or natural goodness in creatures, and a more special or moral goodness.

Perkins.

The goodness of every thing is measured by its end and use, and that's the best thing which serves the best end and purpose.

Tillotson.

All made very particular relations of the strength of the Scots army, the excellent discipline that was observed in it, and the goodness of the men.

Clarendon.

No body can say that tobacco of the same goodness is risen in respect of itself; one pound of the same goodness will never exchange for a pound and a quarter of the same goodness.

Locke.

GOODS, n. f. [from good.]

1. Moveables in a house.

That giv'd to such a guest
As my poor fellow, of all thy goods the best.

Chapman.

2. Personal or moveable estate.

That a writ be su'd against you,
To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Castles, and whatsoever.

Shakspeare Henry VIII.

This hinders nothing the proceedings of the civil courts, which respect the temporal punishment upon body and goods.

Lesley.

3. Wares; freight; merchandise.

Her majesty, when the goods of our English merchants were attached by the duke of Alva, arrested likewise the goods of the Low Dutch here in England.

Raleigh's Essays.

Salute, that scorn'd all pow'r and laws of men,
Goods with their owners hurrying to their den.

Waller.

GOODY, n. f. [corrupted from good wife.]

A low term of civility used to mean persons.

Soft, goody sheep, then said the fox, not so;
Unto the king so rash you may not go.

Hubbard's Tale.

Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd,
Which erst I saw when goody Dobson dy'd.

Gay.

Plain goody would no longer down;

'Twas madam in her gingham gown.

Swift.

GOODYSHIP, n. f. [from goody.] The quality of a goody. Ludicrous.

The more shame for her goodyship,
To give to near a friend the slip.

Hubbard.

GOOSE, n. f. plural geese. [gor, Saxon; goes, Dutch; gaww, Erse, ling. gewey, plural.]

1. A large waterfowl proverbially noted, I know not why, for foolishness.

Thou cream-faced town,
Where got'st thou that goose look?

Since I pluck't geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten till lately.

Shakespeare.

Birds most easy to be drawn are waterfowl; as the goose and swan.

Peckham on Drawing.

Nor watchful dogs, nor the more wakeful geese,
Disturb with nightly noise the sacred peace.

Dryden's Fables.

2. A taylor's smoothing iron.

Come in, taylor: here you may roast your geese.

Shakespeare.

GOOSEBERRY, n. f. [goose and berry, because eaten with young geese as sauce.] A berry and tree.

No, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

GORBELLY, n. f. [from gor, dung, and belly, according to Skinner and Junius.

It may perhaps come from gor, Welsh, beyond, too much; or, as seems to me more likely, may be contracted from gormand, or gormand's belly, the belly of a glutton.] A big paunch;

GOR

a swelling belly. A term of reproach for a fat man.

GORD. n. f. An instrument of gaming, as appears from Beaumont and Fletcher.
Warburton.

Thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gords and minpins.
Beaumont and Fletcher.
Let vultures gripe thy guts; for gords and Fulham holds.
Shakespeare.

GORE. n. f. [gore, Saxon; gôr, Welsh, fanious matter.]

1. Blood effused from the body.

A grievous wound,
From which forth gush'd a stream of gore blood thick,
That all her goodly garment stain'd around,
And into a deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground.
Spenser.
Another's crimes the youth unhappy bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guileful gore.
Dryden's Æn.

2. Blood clotted or congealed.

The bloody fact
Will be aveng'd; though here thou see him die, Rolling in dust and gore. Milton's Paradise Lost.
His horrid beard and knotted tresses stood Stiff with his gore, and all his wounds ran blood.
Denham.

To GORE. v. a. [xebenian, Saxon.]

1. To stab; to pierce.

Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gored with Mowbray's spear.
Shakespeare's Richard III.
No weaker lion's by a stronger slain;
Nor from his larger tusks the forest boar
Commission takes his brother swine to gore.
Tate's Juvenal.
For arms his men long pikes and jav'lines bore,
And poles with pointed steel their foes in battle gore.
Dryden.

2. To pierce with a horn.

Some told'd, some gored, some trampling down
he kill'd.
Dryden.
He idly butting, feigns
His rival gored in every knotty trunk.
Thomson.

GORGE. n. f. [gorge, French.]

1. The throat; the swallow.

There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the fight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which the watry instruments did make their gorge deliver.
Sidney.
And now how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Not in use.
And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
He spewed up his gorge, that all did him detest.
Spenser.

To GORGE. v. n. [gorger, French.]

1. To fill up the throat; to glut; to satiate.

Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and full. Shakespeare.
He that makes his generation messes,
To gorge his appetite. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite.
Dryden.
I desire that they will not gorge the lion either with nonsense or obscenity. Addison.
Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia.
Addison's Cato.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and
blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den.
Addison.

2. To swallow: as, the fish has gorged the hook.

GOS

GORGED. adj. [from gorge.] Having a gorge or throat.

Look up a height, the shrill gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard. Shakespeare.

GORGEOUS. adj. [gorgeias, old French. Skinner.] Fine; splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.

O, that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous palace! Shakespeare.
As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer. Shaksf.
He had them look upon themselves and upon their enemies, themselves dreadful, their enemies gorgeous and brave. Hayward.
The gorgeous east, with richest hand,
Pours on her kings barbaric pearl and gold.
Milton.

With gorgeous wings, the marks of foreign sway,
The two contending princes make their way.
Dryden's Virgil.

GORGEOUSLY. adv. [from gorgeous.] Splendidly; magnificently; finely.

The duke, one solemn day, gorgeously clad in a suit all over spread with diamonds, lost one of them of good value. Wotton.

GORGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from gorgeous.] Splendour; magnificence; show.

GORGET. n. f. [from gorge.] The piece of armour that defends the throat.

He with a pally fumbling on his gorget,
Shakes in and out the rivet. Shakespeare.
He did oftentimes spend the night in the church alone prayin'; his headpiece, gorget, and gauntlets lying by him. Knecht.
See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was.
Ben Jonson.

About his neck a threefold gorget,
As rough as trebled leathern target. Hudibras.

GORGON. n. f. [gorgon.] A monster with snaky hairs, of which the sight turned beholders to stone; any thing ugly or horrid.

Gorgons and hydras, and chymeras dire.
Milton.

Why did'st thou not encounter man for man,
And try the virtue of that gorgon face
To stare me into stature. Dryden.

GORMAND. n. f. [gourmand, French.] A greedy eater; a ravenous luxurious feeder.

To GORMANDIZE. v. n. [from gormand.] To eat greedily; to feed ravenously.

GORMANDIZER. n. f. [from the verb.] A voracious eater.

GORSE. n. f. [gors, Saxon.] Furz; a thick prickly shrub that bears yellow flowers in winter.

GO'RY. adj. [from gore.]

1. Covered with congealed blood.

When two hours with rankling malice met,
Their gory sides the fresh wounds fiercely fret.
Spenser.
Why do'st thou shake thy gory locks at me?
Thou can'st not say I did it. Shaksf. Macbeth.

2. Bloody; murderous; fatal. Not in use.

The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain. Shakespeare.

GO'SHAWK. n. f. [gor, goose, and hapoc, a hawk.] A hawk of a large kind.

Such dread his awful visage on them cast;
So seem poor doves at gyshawks' sight aghast.
Fairfax.

GO'SLING. n. f. [from goose.]

1. A young goose; a goose not yet full grown.

Why do you go nodding and wagging so like a fool, as if you were hipshot? says the goose to her gosling. L'Estrange.

GOS

Nature hath intrusted even a brood of goslings to stick together, while the kite is hovering over their heads. Swift.

2. A katkin on nut-trees and pines.

GO'SPEL. n. f. [godeſ rpe], or God's or good tidings; 1 a. 120. 1; sofel, skal fuach, happy tidings, Euseb.]

1. God's word; the holy book of the christian revelation.

Thus may the gospel to the rising sun
Be spread, and flourish where it first begun.
Waller.

All the decrees whereof scripture treateth are conditionate, receiving Christ as the gospel offers him, as Lord and Saviour; the former, as well as the latter, being the condition of scripture-election, and the rejecting, or not receiving him thus, the condition of the scripture-reprobation.
Hammond.

How is a good christian animated and cheered by a stedfast belief of the promises of the gospel?
Bentley.

2. Divinity; theology.

To GO'SPEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakespeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gospellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you to gospel'd
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whole heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave?
Shakespeare.

GO'SPELLER. n. f. [from gospel.] A name of the followers of Wickliffe, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

These gospellers have had their golden days,
Have trodden down our holy Roman faith. Rowe.

GO'SSAMER. n. f. [gossipium, low Latin.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm sunny weather, especially about the time of autumn. Hammer.

A lover may bestride the gossamer,
That idles in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall, so light is vanity. Shakespeare.
Four nimble gnats the horses were,
Their harnesses of gossamer. Drayton's Nymphid;
The filmy gossamer now sits no more,
Nor halcyons bask on the short sunny thure.
Dryden's Virgil.

GO'SSIP. n. f. [from gob and ryb, relation, affinity, Saxon.]

1. One who answers for the child in baptism.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaud with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shakespeare.
At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips. Darles on Ireland.

2. A tipping companion.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab,
And when she drinks against her lips I bob.
Shakespeare.

3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.

To do the office of a neighbour,
And be a gossip at his labour. Hudibras.
'Tis sung in ev'ry street,
The common chat of gossips when they meet.
Dryden.

To GO'SSIP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaud with me.
—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast.

Shakspeare.

His mother was a votress of my order,
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often hath the gossipee by my fire. Shakspeare.
The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking; and gossippings not be robbed of their ancient privilege. Locke.

He gives himself up to an idle gossipping conversation. Larue.

2. To be a pot-companion.

Nor met with fortune, other than at feast,
Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossipping. Shakspeare.
GOSSIPRED. n. f. [gossipy, from gossip.]
Gossipred or comperativity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent. Davies.

GO'STING. n. f. [rubia.] An herb. Ainsworth.

GOT. The preterit of get.

Titus Lartius writes, they fought together;
but Aufidius got off. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear,
Though foul Thersites got thee, thou shalt be Lov'd and esteem'd. Dryden's Farnax.

These regions and this realm my wars have got. Dryden.

This mournful empire is the loser's lot.
When they began to reason about the means how the sea got thither, and away back again, there they were presently in the dark. Woodward.

GOT. The part. pass. of get.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, in a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Kuilen.

A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the first point of submission to your will is got, will most times do. Locke.

If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is got above the world? Arbuthnot's John Bull.

Thou wert from Anna's burning entrails torn,
Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder borne. Pope.

GO'TTEN. The part. pass. of get.

Wisdom cannot be gotten for gold. Job.

Few of them, when they are gotten into an office, apply their thoughts to the execution of it. Temple.

GOUD. n. f. Wood; a plant. *Dist.GOVE. n. f. A mow. *Tusser.TO GOVE. v. n. To mow; to put in a gove, goff, or mow. An old word.

Load late, carry home, follow time being fair,
Gove just in the barn, it is out of despair. Tusser.

TO GOVERN. v. a. [gouverner, French;

gubernare, Latin.]

1. To rule as a chief magistrate.

This inconvenience is more hard to be redressed
in the governor than the governed; as a malady in a vital part is more incurable than in an external. Spenser on Ireland.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then
It grows impossible to govern men. Waller.

2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.

I am at present against war, though it puts the power into my hands, and though such turbulent and naughty spirits as you are govern all things in times of peace. Davenant.

The chief point, which he is to carry always in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his counsels, designs, and actions. Atterbury.

3. To manage; to restrain.

Counter her, she's desperate; govern her. Shakspeare.

4. [In grammar.] To have force with regard to syntax: as, amo governs the accusative case.

Listen, children, unto me,

And let this your lesson be,

In our language evermore

Words that govern go before. Mauger's Fr. Gr.

5. To pilot; to regulate the motions of a ship.

TO GOVERN. v. n. To keep superiority;

to behave with haughtiness.

By that rule,

Your wicked atoms may be working now

To give bad counsel; that you still may govern. Dryden.

GOVERNABLE. adj. [from govern.] Submissive to authority; subject to rule;

obedient; manageable.

The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and tame. Locke.

GOVERNANCE. n. f. [from govern.]

1. Government; rule; management.

Jonathan took the governance upon him at that time, and rose up instead of his brother Judas. 1 Maccabees.

2. Control, as that of a guardian.

Me he knew not, neither his own ill,
'Till through wife handling, and fair governance,
I him recured to a better will. Spenser.

What! shall king Henry be a pupil still,
Under the surly Gloster's governance? Shakspeare.

3. Behaviour; manners. Obsolete.

He liketh it to fall into mischance
That is regardless of his governance. Spenser.

GOVERNANT. n. f. [gouvernante, Fr.]

A lady who has the care of young girls of quality. The more usual and proper word is governess.

GOVERNESS. n. f. [gouvernesse, French,

from gove.]

1. A female invested with authority.

The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, withes all the air,
That rheumatick diseases do abound. Shakspeare.

2. A tutress; a woman that has the care of young ladies.

He presented himself unto her, falling down upon both his knees, and holding up his hands, as the old governess of Dance is painted, when the suddenly saw the golden shaver. Sellers.

His three younger children were taken from the governess in whose hands he put them. Clarendon.

3. A tutress; an instructress; a directrix.

Great affliction that severe governess of the life of man brings upon their souls the seizure on More against Adrian.

GOVERNMENT. n. f. [gouvernement,
French.]

1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one extended according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many. Temple.

No government can do any act to limit itself:
the supreme legislative power cannot make itself not to be absolute. Locke.

2. An established state of legal authority.

There they shall found
Their government, and their great senate choose Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws or-dain'd. Milton.

While he survives, in concord and content
The common live, by no division rent;
But the great monarch's death dissolves the government. Dryden.

Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power. Adison.

Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one. Swift.

3. Administration of publick affairs.

Safety and equal government are things
Which subjects make as happy as their kings. Waller.

Those governments which curb not evils, cause;
And rich knave's a libel on our laws. Young.

4. Regularity of behaviour. Not in use.

You needs must learn, lead, to amend this fault;
Though sometimes it shews greatness, courage,
blood,
Yet oftentimes it doth present baseness,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain. Shakspeare.

'Tis government that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes thee abominable. Shakspeare.

5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequi-

ousness.

Thy eyes windows fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part depri'd of supple government,
Shall stiff and stark, and cold appear, like death. Shakspeare.

6. Management of the limbs or body.

Obsolete.

Their god
Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;
But I them warded all with wary government. Spenser.

7. [In grammar.] Influence with regard to construction.

GOVERNOUR. n. f. [gouverneur, French.]

1. One who has the supreme direction.

It must be confessed, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governour of the world by pro-videnter, all are partakers. Hooker.

They begot in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governour of such suspicious horrids, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise. Bentley.

2. One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.

For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governour among the nations. Psalms.

The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds as the minister, if so disposed, can urge disobedience: as, for instance, if my governour should command me to do a thing, or I must die, or forfeit my estate; and the minister steps in and tells me, that I offend God, and run my soul, if I obey that command, 'tis easy to see a greater force in this persuasion. South.

3. One who rules any place with delegated and temporary authority.

To you, lord governour
Remains the censure of this belchish villain. Shakspeare.

4. A tutor; one who has care of a young man.

To Estam will I, where the young king is,
Being undrain'd his special governour;
And for his safety there I'll best devise. Shakspeare.

The great work of a governour is to fashion the carriage, and form the mind; to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom. Locke.

During the minority of kings, the election of bishops, and other affairs of the church, must be left in the hands of their governours and counsellors. Leffley.

5. Pilot; regulator; manager.

Behold all the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whither-soever the governour listeth. James.

GOUGE. n. f. [French.] A chisel

having a round edge, for the cutting of such wood as is to be rounded or hollowed.

Maxon.

GOUJERES. n. f. [gouje, French, a camp trull.] The French diseafe. Hammer.

GOURD. n. f. [gourde, French.]

1. A plant. The fruit of some species are long, of others round, or bottle-shaped.

Miller.

But I will hattle, and from each bough and brake,

Each plant, and juiciest gourd, will pluck such choice

To entertain our angel-guest. Milton's Par. Lost.

Gourd seeds abound so much in oil, that a sweet and pleasant one may be drawn from thence by expression; they are of the four greater cold seeds, and are used in emulsions. Hill.

2. A bottle [from gourt, old French. Skinner.] The large fruit so called is often scooped hollow, for the purpose of containing and carrying wine, and other liquors: from thence any leathern bottle grew to be called by the same name, and so the word is used by Chaucer. Hammer.
